HAPPY DUDINA.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CALEB DUNN.

A happy dudine am I now,
A-walking on Rockaway Beach
With the daintiest lover, I vow,
Who talks with the darlingest speech.
Let the whole world deride as it may,
And be most uncivil and rude,
Yet this I just rise up to say:
"I am proud of my dear little dude."

His collar is white as the snow,
It covers his neck, and is tall;
His coat is the nobbiest I know,
With its tail so distingue and small.
His cane is the nattiest of sticks,
From whatever point it is viewed;
It helps me my true-love to fix
On my dear little, beautiful dude.

His shoes—there is point to them, sure;
They stand on most stylish of heels,
And the soles admiration secure
For the foot that each calfskin conceals.
As o'er the sand-carpeted beach
We saunter, his smiles for are sued
By glances more killing than speech
From girls dead in love with my dude.

His lips as bestowals of bliss
Are the nicest a sweetheart can know;
They impart the most soul-warming kiss
That ever set one's cheeks aglow.
'Tis strange that the world should despise
A darling so handsome and good,
Who conquers by style and his eyes
So many as my little dude.

He never has popped at me yet
That question which all maidens love
To listen to, but you can bet
He'll do it some day to his dove.
Some day we'll be roaming the beach
When nobody's near to intrude,
Then he'll say with that darlingest speech
"Dudina, make happy your dude."

And what do you reckon I'll say?
Well, I'll try to be lovely and calm,
And, snapping my fingers this way,
Declare: "That's the hairpin I am."
Then the world will a new beauty wear,
We shall heed not its woes nor its feuds,
But be happy in our proper share
Of dear little full-blooded dudes.

A NATATORIAL FIEND

A RETIRED SHOWMAN'S STORY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JAMES WIGHT.

"She's veiled again—always that infernal veil down to the tip of her nose!"

"What a majestic form she has, and she walks as if she were a twin sister of Juno!"

Remarks like the foregoing were constantly in order when Mrs. Ladimir showed herself in public at the seaside. Her husband was her inseparable companion, and seemed most devoted to her; yet, whether they went riding, boating or swimming, she wore the inevitable short veil, concealing two-thirds of her face. Mr. and Mrs. Ladimir were evidently rich. They had their own horses and carriages, besides a retinue of servants, and they had their meals served in their suit of rooms. Presumably Mrs. Ladimir wore her veil at table, for the parlor-boy of the hotel inquired of her maid "if her mistress slept in a veil."

The sojourn of the Ladimirs at the watering-place extended over two weeks, during which they had no intercourse whatever with any of the guests of the hotel. It was noticed as a singular circumstance, however, that about eleven o'clock on the night before they left the seaside the lady paid a visit of two hours to the Gill Cottage. Moreover, she was unaccompanied—she went and returned to the hotel alone.

Now, Uncle Bob Gill, as he is familiarly termed, is a retired showman, whose snug little hoard of savings enables him to spend his declining days with much comfort. Not long ago the old gentleman conveyed to the present writer a knowledge of the circumstances which led to the imposition of a veil upon Mrs. Ladimir.

"A publication of the facts can do them no harm now," said the old man, "for Mrs. Ladimir has gone before that great Tribunal before which nothing can be hid, while poor Stephen might as well be dead, so far as the affairs of life are concerned."

Mrs. Ladimir was four or five and twenty years of age when she came to America, and when Uncle Bob Gill first saw her. Of Spanish extraction, married to a not overwealthy Englishman, her beauty was indisputable, but it was freely alleged that she used her charms in the work of Satan. Her society-life in London was dotted here and there with those offenses that no one knows how to punish or how to excuse. To generate love in the most guarded heart and afterwards to spurn it aside with deliberate cold-bloodedness had been her European practice. Probably with the aim of widening the field of her conquests, she took to the stage. She possessed but little ability; yet what does ability signify nowadays? All the world asks to-day is a meretricious exhibition of female beauty behind those footlights where genius used to reign.

In the period occupied by her rehearsals of Rosalind and other characters she was invited to attend a ball at West Point. There she was first introduced to Colonel Ladimir—a nobleman by heavenly patent, a handsome young man with a fortune and all the world before him. Madame Eulalia Girti, as she then designated herself, was pronounced the belle of the gay assemblage. Superbly toileted, her statuesque bosom flashing with jewels, her beautifully-rounded arms clasped above the elbow by a zone of dead-gold, while her eyes, dark and lustrous as a Persian's, shot around their dangerously languid glances, she reminded the young colonel of those glowing sibyls limned by Guido or Rubens, and it was not long before he was whirling her round in the waltz.

The Erosian torch having been applied, the flame spread in the young officer's heart. For some weeks the infatuation seemed to be reciprocal. He obtained a long furlough, and then resigned his commission in the army, to the exceeding grief of his friends. Of course he heard of her London career and of her flirtations and gambling at Nice and Monaco; but in the presence of "the angelic fiend," as Bob Gill used to call her, Colonel Ladimir saw only the divinity of her charms. However she may have wrung other hearts, he believed her true to him. The motto of his life was embodied in Moore's lines:

"I know not, I ask not, if guilt's in that heart;
I but know that I love thee, whatever thou art!"

During the tour of the States and Canadas Agent Gill was often greatly annoyed by the billing and cooing of the pair of lovers.

"Many and many a time I mentally consigned the 'overgrown lap-dog,' as I used to call him, to perdition; but by the time we reached 'Frisco I began to feel sorry for Ladimir. The fickleness, caprice and temper of the woman began to be manifested. She would order him away from rehearsals, and snub him in various ways. While in California she suddenly made up her mind to accept an offer for a tour in Australia. 'Of course you will accompany me, Mr. Gill; same terms,' she said to me; and it was settled there and then. Up to that moment the Colonel hadn't heard a word about the Australian tour, and the news dropped from me accidentally, as it were. I saw him bite his lip and hurry to join her. An hour afterwards he came to my room in the hotel. He was as pale as death; his hands shook, he looked twenty years older."

"'Take a nip of brandy, Colonel,' I said; 'you look all shook up; what is the matter?"

The poor fellow told Gill that through his exertions Eulalia Girti had procured a Western divorce from her English husband. He had previously told her of his love, and she had asked him to get the decree. Now, previous to sailing for Australia, he had urged the marriage. She had listened impatiently, and tartly answered:

"Don't talk ridiculous nonsense, Steve! I have no idea of marying you or anyone else. Shake hands and drop this stupid topic. When you get back to New York look out among the Knickerbocker belles for a wife; I am not 'running'—isn't that the word?—on your matrimonial ticket. Ha, ha, ha!"

Poor Ladimir was struck dumb. The siren held out her hand and said:

"There, don't take on about it—it's such dreadful bad form. Shake hands, and kiss me. There! Now let us say good-bye, or au revoir, rather. Now return to your folks like a good boy!"

Ten days later, he entered his home in the East with a heavy, staggering step. His eyes were bloodshot from want of sleep, and his clothes hung loosely on his shrunken limbs.

"It is all over, then," said his mother as she embraced him.

"Yes; it appears so," he answered.

Hardly had Ladimir started East than Agent Gill discovered that Eulalia had scraped a warm acquaintance with one of the big guns of the Bank of California, now also passed to his final account. They used to go in swimming together, and her natatorial performances created a sensation.

"I shall not attempt to describe her feats in the water," said Uncle Bob Gill, "for they were wonderful. She was a regular professional, and seemed amphibious by nature and instinct. Talk of your 'Water-queens,' your 'Lurlines' and your 'Women-fish,' for my part I never saw anything like her. Seeing her in her glossy tights, like a wondrous piece of sculpture, I fancied I beheld the aphrodite whom a hundred altars gloried with Arabian incense and worshiped with flowers ever fresh."

To the victim who came within the sorcery of Eulalia's charms, to be forewarned was not to be forearmed. The Californian, a divorced man, poured his weath into her lap and offered her hand and fortune. She told him to wait till she returned from Australia.

"Soon after that," said Mr. Gill, "we sailed for Melbourne. She was not sea-sick an hour; but she was the most peevish and discontented person I ever met aboard ship. Nothing was right. She quarreled with the captain, the stewardess, her maid, and me. Sometimes she would sit down by me, or make me promenade the deck with her, and she would take a turn at abusing herself. She said she was a fool not to have captured the California millionaire; but she swore with an oath she would never let such another chance slip through her fingers. She even grew discontented with her name, and when we arrived at Melbourne Eulalia Girti had become contracted to Lagirt, and she was billed in Australia by that name."

During her month's engagement in Sydney Madame Lagirt made a distinguished conquest in the form of a wealthy widower. He was named Hamilton, and was about forty years old. On the whole, he was just as devoted as poor Ladimir had been. They supped together, drove together, and went swimming together. He was a remarkably fine swimmer, and Madame Lagirt used to say that she would marry him, leave the stage, and start a natatorium in Paris. Her agent was not surprised at anything she said or did, and consequently, when she informed him a few days before they left Australia that she had agreed to make Hamilton happy, he merely said:

"I congratulate you, madame; Mr. Hamilton seems to be a fine gentleman."

The marriage came off, and the party sailed for India. All went well for a time; but before the end of the voyage she evinced symptoms of being bored by her husband's kindly-meant attentions.

"O Gill, Gill!" she said, "what a fool I was to marry! I was very much happier without a husband!"

Among the passengers was an elderly French physician who had spent half a lifetime in India. One night behind the wheel-house Gill heard part of a conversation:

"The advantage of poison over a pistol is that it leaves no traces. Unfortunately, as soon as a new poison is discovered, a new method is also found for verifying its presence. Arsenic, strychine, chloroform, chloral and morphine have found their masters—in other words, their antidotes. I could point out to you a way of poisoning a score of people in a closed room without giving them any beverage. The experiment costs a mere bagatelle: yet the assassin's head would go into the bargain. A French chemist has invented a subtle composition, which is contained in a tiny tube. When the tube is broken the people near it drop down as if shot. The trouble is you cannot persuade the authorities that they died a natural death. Another beautiful discovery has just been made. It is a certain preparation of potassium, and looks like galvanized rubber. It is perfectly harmless when kept dry. Touch it with water or other liquid, and it bursts into a violent corrosive flame."

"Where can that preparation be procured, Dr. Orcagna?" asked Madame Lagirt.

"I never proceed further than generalities, madame," quoth the physician, "when I speak of poisons."

She assumed a coaxing and caressing voice, and Gill, listening, thought of wily Vivien coaxing the secret of the wizard spell of "woven paces and waving arms" from old Merlin in the woods of Broceliande. Like Merlin, Dr. Orcagna had yielded to the charm of her pleading, and told her full particulars before he slept; but Gill was not aware of the fact, for they had shifted their positions. Nor did he learn it till years afterwards.

During the Indian tour madame's dislike for her husband was too deep to be disguised. Not unfrequently in Gill's presence they had a passage-at-arms, and in this way the agent learned that the infatuated man had placed twenty thousand pounds of Bank of England notes in her possession on the morning of their nuptials.

From India they returned by the Suez Canal to Marseilles, and straightaway proceeded to Monaco and Santa Carlo. Here at the tables in a few days she lost nearly all her savings. Her passion for play amounted to a mania. Her husband was powerless to restrain her. One evening, when she had borrowed money on her diamonds to gamble with, and lost it, like the rest, she said to her husband:

"Come, let us take the train for Mentone; I want a swim."

Next day tidings reached Gill that Hamilton had been drowned, and he proceeded to Mentone, and saw madame, pale but composed.

They had gone out swimming a long way, she said in substance, and Mr. Hamilton was suddenly taken with cramp; she had dived again and again after him, until she was exhausted, and it had been necessary to send a boat to her assistance. During the next ten days the body was not recovered. The lady's appetite remained good. The evening before she left the south of France she raised gambling funds and was favored by the fickle jade Fortune. In three hours she broke the bank, and proceeded to Paris richer by forty thousand dollars.

MISS ROSE MASSEY, ACTRESS.

FOR OBITUARY SEE "DEATHS IN THE PROFESSION."

During her engagement in the French capital she one night saw Colonel Ladimir in a box, and sent a message to him by the usher. The poor fellow visited her room, and was as delighted as a child with a new toy.

"In a gush of delight he told me afterwards," said Gill, "that she had promised to marry him in two years."

Full of that promise and perfectly idolizing "the angelic fiend," he returned to his native land to announce his happiness. Before he had reached New York madame had struck up a high-pressure intimacy with a Russian Baron, and in a little more than two months all Paris was aware that a private marriage had been solemnized.

At the end of the Paris engagement Madame Lagirt retired from the stage. But Gill learned that her marriage with the Russian was no happier than her marriage with the Australian. They had both gambled at Monaco, and afterwards quarreled. A partial reconciliation had followed, and they had proceeded to Trouville, where during the Summer she indulged in the usual sensational exhibitions in the water in flesh-colored tights. The Russian held a commission in the navy of the Czar, and was a splendid swimmer. One day he took "cramp" at Trouville and was drowned. "An Eye-witness" thus describes the fatal mishap in a Parisian afternoon-paper:

"When they started from the shore I saw her shoot ahead of her husband, wait for him, dive, come to the surface, chaff him, approach him, caress him, and laugh at him. Surely, she is a most adorable woman! They were about a third of a mile from the shore and in deep water, when she swam to him, and they both turned on their backs and floated. Suddenly he threw up his arms and sank. The Baroness swam like wild-fire round and round the spot, diving repeatedly in a frantic but ineffectual effort to save her husband's life. Never was seen a spectacle of such unselfish devotion! She is, in fact, a woman all soul—a woman in ten millions! I was one of those who had the honor of proceeding to her assistance with a boat. The Baron was drowned in consequence of cramp. The body was washed ashore next morning. The authorities were greatly impressed with her speechless sorrow. The venerable magistrate before whom she gave her testimony kissed her hand and bestowed on her his blessing."

"You would naturally imagine after this," said Uncle Bob Gill, "that Colonel Ladimir would give her a wide berth. But no; he didn't seem to have the strength of mind to keep away from her. Nobody can describe or explain the power of certain women over certain men. Ladimir read the story of madame's second marriage and second widowhood in the papers, and he crossed over to Europe, found her, pressed his suit, was finally accepted, and married her. Ladimir said they were very happy for a time. She admitted that she had never been truly in love with a husband before. For his part, Ladimir thought her to be a woman without an equal. But there was no steadfast character or continuity of affection in this singular woman. 'I would like to marry a man as I rent a house,' she said to a stage acquaintance on one occasion. And undoubtedly those were her true sentiments."

It came to pass that madame grew tired of Ladimir, as she had grown tired of the three previous husbands. Not that he had the remotest suspicion of such a change of heart. They were staying at the seaside, and when they went in swimming she used to tease him and ask if he was not afraid of cramp when swimming with her. And he always ridiculed the idea. One evening they had swum out together eight or nine hundred yards at a rapid rate. She was some distance ahead and Ladimir was slightly blown. She threw herself on her back and floated, waiting for him to join her.

"I have a secret, Steve," she said; "I use a small tin-coated pill when I am in the water. It promotes muscular endurance. Will you try one?"

"Yes, certainly," he said, "next time we come swimming."

"I have some pills here," she said, and she took a small brass vial from the coils of her hair, and handed him the pill. "Be quick and swallow it," she continued, "or the water will—Ah—h!"

Her shriek rent the air, and the next instant the Colonel saw that his wife had been attacked by a small man-eating shark. As he struck out to her assistance there was an explosion in his hand, to which he paid little attention at the time. By his cries and exertions the voracious brute was driven away, but not until her forehead and the upper part of her face had been dreadfully lacerated. This disfigurement was permanent, and imposed the necessity of wearing a veil.

Two years after their visit to America, when staying in Paris, she was indisposed and got up at night to take a pill. By some unaccountable misplacement she got the wrong vial, and her secret was betrayed at the expense of her life. She swallowed the pill described by the French chemist, containing a preparatio of potassium, which in recent days has been sold in the streets of New York as "a novel pipe or cigar lighter." She lingered long enough to make a full confession of her crimes, real and intended. The revelation ultimately had the effect of depriving poor Ladimir of his reason. It was from his lips that Uncle Bob Gill heard the story.

HE BELIEVED IN TEMPERANCE.

"Fact is," said Mr. Swiller, sitting down at the round-table with his friend—"fact is—two beers, Tony!—there's just as much intemperance in eating as there is in drinking, and that's what puts me—by George, that's refreshing, isn't it? Cold as ice. Fill 'em up again, Tony—out of patience with these total-abstinence fanatics. A man can be temperate in his eating and he can be temperate in his drinking, and I go—light a cigar?—in for temperance in all things. Now, I like to—thank you, yes, I believe I will repeat—sit down with a friend and enjoy a glass of beer in a quiet way, just as we do now. It's cold, refreshing, mildly stimulant—have another with me—and does me good. I know when I have enough, and—once more, Tony—when I have enough I know enough to quit. Now, do I look—hello, there's Johnson; sit down here with us, Johnson; three beers, Tony—I was just asking Blotter, here, if I looked like a victim of dyspepsia. I don't drink much water this weather; I believe it's the worst—this time with me, fellows—thing a man can put into his system, such weather as this. I believe beer is the best thing for any man, and I know it's the best thing for me. But I—don't hurry; have another before you go; here, Tony!—don't gorge myself with it; I don't sit around and get full every time I take a drink. I like to—three more, Tony—sit down quietly with a friend and enjoy a glass of beer and a bite of lunch, but I don't like to gorge myself. I don't eat myself into a—fill these up again—dyspepsia, either, and then claim to be a temperate man. Temperance in all things is my mozzer-mozzo-motto. Thatsh me. Now, I don-donk-donkall I donkall myshelf a drinking man—once more wiz me, fellows—I like to sit down quieshly wish few frens and 'joy glash beer—just becaush does me good, good. But I don't eat myshelf to death—oncesh more all roun'—like thesh temperals falatics—oncesh in a while I like glash of beer—jush in quiet way oncesh in a while, but you don'see—you don'fee me gettin' full ev'y time ——" (Talks temperance in all things and undue indulgence in nothing over twelve more glasses, and succumbs).—Burlington Hawkeye.

ICY IDIOSYNCRASIES.—The density of ice differs very much with the longitude. Now, ten pounds of ice in Burlington, Ia., is about three feet square; in Cincinnati it is about the size of a soap-box, in Pittsburg it is as big as a stove-pipe hat, in Philadelphia it has to be put in the ice-chest directly from the wagon, or it will melt away before you can run into the house with it; and in New York, if you ask a dealer for ten pounds of ice, he laughs in a hollow manner, and says he never heard of such a thing. You take fifty pounds or nothing, and then he weighs it on a letter-scale.—Burlington Hawkeye.

SAD FATE OF A TWO-HEADED CHICKEN.—There is a man in this county who had a chicken that had two heads, four eyes, four feet and four wings. On one occasion the heads disagreed, one wanting to go through one crack of the fence and the other another, which caused it to fasten itself and die.—The Wrightsville Recorder.

L. D., Brooklyn.—From the time, in 1865, when she was launched to the time when she was burned, the steamboat Seawanhaka was in East River waters what the Mary Powell was in the North River. Her ordinary time-table speed sufficed to enable her to pass anything that came her way except in the Sound, past Sands Point, when the water was rough, and then, of course, she ought not to have been able to hold her own with the large Sound boats. She usually worked on 32lb of steam, and in traveling on her a thousand times or more we never saw her carry quite 35lb, which was far below her inspection allowance. She was a low, light, shallow-water boat, with great length and (like the Sylvan Dell) great power for her beam. In fact, as soon as launched it was found necessary to lengthen her about thirty feet amidships, her machinery being too heavy for her, especially as her builder had made her a few feet shorter than the specifications called for. She was never raced, and so it was never known how fast she could go. She had a careful engineer, who would not race, as many years before he was disfigured by being blown up on the Alice Price in the Shrewsbury River; but we have heard that once, when he was off duty, the Seawanhaka was "raced up to the nozzle" with the D. R. Martin, and had all she could do to hold her own. We do not believe this, because we were on her several times when, with less than 35lb of steam, she had no difficulty in showing her rudder to the Martin in the latter's palmiest days, which were when she ran to Oyster Bay, or before she was burned and was made a double ender of. Both boats were built by the same man, but the original Martin was the shorter and had the smaller cylinder. On general principles, boats like the immediate predecessor of the present Rhode Island, with greater length and greater cylinder and stroke, should have beaten the Seawanhaka, if both were driven, as beyond a certain point where model has its greatest effect speed in steamboats is simply a question of capacity to consume much coal to advantage. The Seawanhaka was never driven. She probably never before went so fast as when, all heated up by the flames that were devouring her, and her engine beyond control, she was driven up onto Sunken Mash. It is not possible to decide the wager as to her relative speed.

J. W. H., Flushing.—To our view, the clause means that, while a less number, such as a stipulated quorum, may transact all other business, it requires a vote of a majority of the members of the club to change the constitution, and not simply a majority of those who, constituting a majority of the entire club, may happen to be present. Were it otherwise, less than one third could change your constitution, thus: Say there are twenty-one members altogether; eleven are present, and six of these, being a majority of those present, but probably fewer than the quorum needed to transact even ordinary business, would have the power, as you interpret the clause, to change the constitution. The clause itself does not confer that privilege, and it is not likely that when the constitution was adopted it was designed that so few members could possibly change the entire character or purpose of the club. It was probably intended that nothing but a majority of the members—in other words, the concurrent votes of a majority of all the members of the club—should be permitted to change the constitution.

A. J. F., Nashville.—It depends upon whether it is a heat-race or a dash-race, upon whether it is a match-race or a cup-race, and upon whether the pools are sold subject to the regulations of the course on which the races are run or in accordance with the regulations of the rooms that sell the pools, as the pool-sellers can make any arbitrary regulations they please. 2. It was a cup-race between Springbok and Preakness, and under the rules of the Saratoga track the owners could divide the prize if they did not wish to run off the dead-heat. That agreement divided in the same proportion all pools sold subject to the regulations of the Saratoga track. If a bettor had laid $95 against $5 on either horse he would have had the rare pleasure of receiving $50 of his money back. Had it been a match-race between Springbok and Preakness, the refusal of the owners to run it off would not have affected outside bets, which would have been drawn.

T. K., Darien.—A is pool on 59 clear, if B has a scratch. It is not necessary for a player to get 61, unless in a two-handed game no "scratch" has been made. Pool is won whenever it is no longer possible for low man to tie high man by pocketing all the remaining balls on the table. Play is not to continue on the chance that high man may get a "scratch." A good player could keep a game up all the afternoon if the roomkeeper would permit the two contestants to spar for the last ball. As it would do low man no good to pocket it, he would aim to keep it out and at the same time to place it where the other could not well pocket it, but would be apt to incur a "scratch" or two in his attempts to pocket it.

T. C. A., Chicago.—As you word it, A loses. He contracted specifically to beat G. There is no pretense that G contracted to beat A. So far as the statement goes, he contracted simply not to be beaten, and he was not beaten. This is our way of looking at such special contracts. It would be a draw if A had simply said: "I will throw you to see which beats," or if G, after A had off red to bet he would beat him, had said: "All right; I'll bet you that I'll beat you." In either case the obligation, so far as expressed by both parties, would have been mutual. In the actual case as stated, one expressly undertook to do more than the other.

L. E. D., St. Louis—No day and year being specified, it was to be presumed that the parties meant the next hour o'clock after the bet was made. The presumption is always, when two parties make a bet, that they mean that one shall win and the other lose; and A cannot shirk this by setting up the plea that no particular day or time of the year was specified. He might with equal reason urge in case he had agreed on July 22 to put up a certain amount by four o'clock on July 21 that he need not do it, because 1883 was not specified, and he meant 1899.

J. H., ——1. It depends upon circumstances whether A could deal twice in succession or not, and your statement seems to have been written with the intention of avoiding anything tending to show what induced A to deal twice or what induced B to object after the cards had been dealt, or "as the cards are dealt," as you put it. It is not likely that B would have objected if he held the ace, deuce, jack and ten of the trump suit. 2. There are games in which a player can deal twice in succession, no matter who objects.

T. H. K.—Not necessarily. The few referees who are accorded the power to take cognizance of bets not infrequently declare them off at the same time that they declare the race won. Ordinarily, it is an act of presumption in a referee to meddle with bets. He is chosen simply to decide disputes between contestants, although many a man, when selected for referee, is apt to fancy that the whole earth depends on himself.

NORTH AMERICAN INDIAN.—There were once a people called the Aurantans, and from this circumstance, doubtless, comes the choice of "Aurania" for the new steamer of the Cunard line. They who christen those steamers are constantly on the search for odd geographical names terminating in "ia." By-and-bye they will light on Araucania, and that will puzzle people as much as Auranis has mystified them.

J. B. G., Weldon.—A gammon is equivalent to two games. When B did not claim the two games out of the three, by gammoning A, but continued to play on until A had won a second game, the games, or points, became equal—two and two—which makes it necessary to play one more game to see who is entitled to the ticket.

C. E., Philadelphia.—As there was no game between the Athletics and Metropolitans on July 27, ordinary bets are off. Bets that were specifically made play or pay are won by the backers of the club to whom the game was awarded by forfeiture. Pool room and book bets are subject to pool-room and bookmakers' arbitrary regulations.

J. S. B.—B wins. Dew is not the sweat of plants, except in the sense that it may also be called the sweat of a pitcher containing cold coffee or tea and standing in a place warmer than itself. Dew is simply the vapor of the ordinary air, which, when it finds a surface colder than itself, deposits itself thereon, whether that surface is a plant, a stick, a stone or a human being.

LIVERY, Winnipeg.—A having shaken 11, and B having bet that he would beat it, B loses in throwing it. A man must do what he contracts to do, save where there is a special law, as with respect to certain dead heats on the turf, to assign arbitrarily to his proposition a meaning that possibly he never intended.

A. N. B., Jamestown.—He can play at any ball on the table, provided that he first causes the cue-ball to go outside of the string. One reason is that it is no easier for him to bank than it would be for him to play on ball C and pocket either ball marked A by a two-cushion carom.

H. O., Baltimore.—There are cases occasionally of which we do not care to take cognizance. Yours is one of them. Besides, you did not take the contract, and there is no need of a decision unless to find out what our decision would be in case there were a contract.

J. C., Williamsburg.—C. E. Courtney never rowed a match race with E. A. Trickett, but he rowed against him in the second trial-heat of the open scullers' race at Toronto, Ont., in September, 1881. That heat was won by F. H. Conley, Courtney being second and Trickett third.

H. J. S., St. Paul.—1. No. The only places at which Hanlan and Courtney met in races were Lachine and Washington. 2. Hanlan's time in the race with Courtney at Lachine, five miles, turn, was 36m. 22s.

T. S., Kingston.—It is not a misdeal. B's hand is foul, and he must withdraw from play for that round. Had he discovered that he had six cards without looking at their faces or without lifting them, he could have claimed a misdeal.

F. S., Ft. Cummings.—The fastest authenticated times for the distance are those given in THE CLIPPER ALMANAC. Professional sprint-races are nearly always run from flying starts, and do not, therefore, constitute a record.

C. H. C., Cicero.—There are mints or United States assay offices in the following cities: Philadelphia, San Francisco, New Orleans, Charlotte, N. C.; New York, Denver, Carson City, Nev.; Boise City, Idaho; and Helena, Montana.

W. C., Reading.—Your ball being fast to the red when it is your opponent's turn to play, it is not a case of freezing in billiards. His ball being free, he can play at either of the others. The balls are not to be spotted.

W. A. W., Milwaukee.—Unless it was agreed beforehand that he could, the player could not, without a seven in his hand, build a pile of seven to favor the play of his partner, who had made a pile of seven.

A SUBSCRIBER, Philadelphia.—There are figures for fractional distances, but we do not publish them in THE CLIPPER ALMANAC. What do you wish to know?

A SUBSCRIBER.—In the six-day race won by him in this city Oct. 6 to 11, 1879, Nicholas Muir, by traveled a distance of 505 miles 220 yards.

R. C., Cleveland.—The two others having passed, and the dealer having knocked, he is to turn up the quoppy for the other two players to peek one card each from, if they wish a card.

J. C. H.—We cannot say anything about the present time, but when the census was taken in 1880 there were 6,679,943 foreign-born in the population of the United States.

INQUIRER, Camden.—Payment of bets is due on all games played up to the time of the disbandment of the club.

J. C. S., Buffalo.—Several amateurs have run one hundred yards in 10s. See records in CLIPPER ALMANAC.

OLD READER.—1. The Athletics in 1871, and the Bostons in 1872, '73, '74 and '75, were the winners of the championship of the Professional Association. 2. We answered you several weeks ago under another signature that the other associations were only organized this season. We will give the names of the champion clubs at the close of the season.

M. K. A., Stoneham.—1. The St. Louis Club play at the Polo Grounds in this city Aug. 27, 29, 30 and 31, and at Twenty-sixth and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, Sept. 3, 4, 5 and 6. 2. They are occupying the leading position. 3. Yes.

SAM, Baltimore.—1. If the batsman failed to run to first base he was the only one out. Otherwise two men were out. 2. The rules this year allow a batsman by not running in such a case to prevent a double or triple play. All umpires decide it legal.

CITIZEN, Richmond.—As the bet was worded, according to your statement, A loses. His hand had to be smaller, as he bet it would be. See answer to "Livery, Winnipeg."

P. AND A., Bodie.—The cards have run out, and there should be a new deal. By agreement of all the players, however, the last card can be turned up for trump.

ENQUIRER.—It would depend upon a number of contingent circumstances, and would probably require a trial before a jury to decide who was liable for the damage.

B. P., Glen House.—Ed. Hanlan was never beaten in a match single-scull race. His record in full was published in THE CLIPPER of July 28.

J. H. J., Sprout Brook.—1. Jesse Haney & Co., 121 Nassau street, New York, publish a book on that subject. 2. We believe the degree can be conferred here.

YORK, Pa.—B loses. If he meant neither more nor less than 145lb he had to say that when he bet. Anything that weighs 149lb has necessarily to weigh 145lb.

SUBSCRIBER, Parkhill.—1. Yes, because your opponent must be a professional, from your statement. 2. See records in CLIPPER ALMANAC.

W. W., Columbus.—1. A. T. Stewart had several partners in business at the time of his death. 2. Robert Bonner was born in Ireland, we believe.

J. J. C., Chicago.—Four sixes won the pot; but if A bet, as you say that he did, that "his four sixes would win the pot," A loses, for those sixes won but one-half of the pot.

TEN-YEAR READER, Hamilton.—1. The base-runner can run without the ball being returned to the pitcher. 2. The ball is not in play until it is held by the pitcher standing in his position.

L. McE.—The "Manual of Sporting Rules," published by Ed. James (whose advertisement see), contains the rules bearing on the subject.

J. C., Fort Wayne.—1. It means putting two men on the same fielding play. 2. A "life" is the declining of an offered chance to put a man out. 3. We do not use those abbreviations.

F. C., Trenton.—1. The assist should be scored to the short-stop alone. 2. It would have been a base-hit if the ball had not been fielded by the short-stop.

W. W., New Haven.—Clapp caught for an amateur club of Ilion, N. Y., about sixteen seasons ago, but never played professionally there. The party who bet that he did loses.

H. J. G., Franklin.—133yds. 1ft. 7½in. by John Hatfield at the Union Grounds, Brooklyn, Oct. 15, 1872.

W. H., Philadelphia.—The American Association's reserve-rule allows their clubs to keep players for years if they wish to do so.

AMATEUR.—Address either Whitney or Hornung, and he may give you the desired information.

J. P. H.—According to your statement, B, by failing to kill more than thirteen birds, lost his bet.

C. Q. S., El Paso.—Address Messrs. G. W. & C. B. Colton & Co., 182 William street, this city.

BASEBALL, Indianapolis.—B wins. The Indianapolis Club would have had to make at least two runs in order for A to win.

J. B. T. B., Waterbury.—Ewing, Connor and Gillespie each made hits in that direction.

C. E. G., Lawrence.—You will find those records in THE CLIPPER ALMANAC; price, fifteen cents.

FOUR READERS.—See page 23 of CLIPPER ALMANAC for 1883 for list of international rifle-matches.

CONSTANT READER, Chicago.—A negro never fought for the championship of the United States or of the world.

D. B., Detroit.—Send $250 to Harry Hill, 26 East Houston street, this city, and you can get a match.

E. P. F., Des Moines.—Five fives beat four fives and a six at poker dice.

J. G. D., Salem.—C was out with his king. It was his privilege to lead anything.

L. B. P., Battle Creek.—Yes, we receive newspapers, but do not advertise them in the list.

J. W., Oakland.—1. No answers by mail. 2. The shield is the head on an old five-cent nickle piece.

CONSTANT READER.—As they did not weigh on the day we cannot give you the desired information.

C. M. O. F., Chicago.—Sixes are highest and aces lowest in poker-dice.

W. G. T., Peoria.—Only the dealer can give at seven-up.

CAPTAIN WEBB.

The death of this fearless yet modest man and skillful swimmer is the more to be regretted because it was incurred in undertaking a feat that would have demonstrated nothing of practical value had it been successfully accomplished. His passing through the preliminary rapids and the whirlpool without other damage than a few bruises would of course have proved that a man could get through; but a dumby in the shape of a man would have proved as much by going through intact. But it may be urged that the dumby's passage without having its clothes torn into tatters would not have proved that a man could have made the perilous journey without being drowned or suffocated. That would have necessitated a second experiment, and a monkey or a pig could have been chosen for it. Had the animal lost its life, a post-mortem examination would have proved whether it had been drowned and wounded after death, or wounded before death. There was not even money in Captain Webb's hazardous venture. Even had he escaped with his life, he would have had to repeat his performance in order to pecuniarily profit from it; and it is to be questioned if, after the severe struggle with those rushing, seething, colliding and reacting waters necessary during the half hour or so needed to make the journey to a place of safety, his mind, which in the contemplation of new dangers constantly arising must have been infinitely the most active part of him while he was immersed, would ever again be in the mood to calmly contemplate another undertaking of that kind in the deep and mighty chasm through which the waters of Erie mingle with those of Ontario. There has been a brave life needlessly foreshortened. There remains as a sort of mournful satisfaction but a theory. While doctors disagree as to precisely how Captain Webb met his death, those who conducted the post-mortem examination, and whose opinions should therefore be of the greatest weight, have concluded that he was neither drowned nor mortally hurt by being dashed against the jagged rocks in his path. They have put forth the theory that it was impossible for the man to breathe in that turmoil of waters, and that the breath was crushed out of him as it would have been by the increased resistance of the atmosphere had he jumped from the railroad track down into the chasm. He would probably have been dead before he struck the river, as he was doubtless dead before he had passed through the known and well-defined rapids and reached the uncertain whirlpool proper. Could it be demonstrated beyond the possibility of a doubt that it was the wound in his head that caused death, or even that he was drowned before receiving that wound, there would be an incentive for the undertaking of the feat by others, who in their vanity would assume that they are stronger short-distance swimmers than the Captain was, or possess better judgment for avoiding dangers than he had. But it is not probable that anyone will now venture where there is reason to believe that nothing can breathe, even though I can successfully keep its head above the main body of water; and so, probably, with the sad end of Captain Webb we have heard the last of schemes of puny man to laugh to scorn the rapids and the whirlpool of Niagara River. The fate of Webb becomes additionally impressive when viewed in connection with the unusual number of deaths of expert swimmers elsewhere recently. It would seem as if the ultimate end of learning to swim dexterously is to lead men into drowning themselves, either by becoming overconfident or foolhardy in the water or by tempting them to go beyond their powers in seeking to rescue people who have gone beyond their depth or have remained so long in the water as to suggest that they have not the sense to realize that if the Almighty had intended man to live in the sea he would have provided him with fins. The death of Webb is further emphasized by a report that comes to us from England of the untimely fate of one Murphy, a Preston butcher, who in a limited sense was a rival of Webb, and had, it seems, on at least one occasion, challenged him to leap into a dangerous whirlpool in England. On the identical day on which Webb defied Niagara River, Murphy, who had heard of the Captain's intention and had predicted that he would not come out alive, essayed to battle with the whirlpool in his own waters, and was worsted. If the reported death of Murphy in this way is true, it is another reason for instructing people that the chief danger of swimming rapids lies neither in drowning nor in being ground up by rocks. It lurks in something that is wholly beyond the power of man to circumvent.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY AMATEUR ROWING ASSOCIATION.

PULLMAN, Ill., July 27, 1883.

EDITOR NEW YORK CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: The weather on the first day of the regatta of the Mississippi Valley Amateur Rowing Association was unfortunate. All morning the rain fell heavily, and it was doubtful whether or not the races would take place. Towards noon it eased up, now and then a slight shower falling. By two o'clock it ceased entirely, and the sun commenced to break through the clouds. The water was slightly rough, a stiff breeze blowing from the southwest, thereby retarding the boats on their first mile, but helping them on the return. The attendance was poor, numbering about 1,000, the Chicago people no doubt supposing there would be a postponement. All races on the programme were one mile and return except the six-oared barge-race, which was one mile.

Junior double-sculls—Minnesota Boat Club, St. Paul, A. H. Schiffman, J. J. Parker (stroke), first, in 13m. 55s.; Davenport B. C., Davenport, Ia., J. P. Donahue, H. S. Putnam (stroke), second, in 14m. 8s.; Delaware B. C., Chicago, W. Weinand, J. F. Korf (stroke), third, in 14m. 30s.; Modoc B. C., St. Louis, M. J. Moore, G. A. Brungard (stroke), fourth, in 15m. 10s. They got away evenly, but the Minnesotas soon took the lead. At the turning-stake they were three lengths in front of the Davenports, who were closely followed by the Delawares, the Modocs being a poor fourth. The same relative positions were maintained on the return.

Junior pair-oared shells—Burlington Boating Association, Burlington, Ia., W. O. Ransom, E. Marshall (stroke), first, in 15m. 24s.; Sylvan Boat Club, Moline, Ill., P. A. Merriman, J. McEnary (stroke), second; and Farragut Boat Club, Chicago, W. W. Sommes, C. L. Washburn (stroke), third. This was a walkaway for the Burlingtons, although they started poorly. At the mile-stake they had a lead of ten lengths over the Sylvans, who had taken in considerable water on the way down. The Farraguts were five lengths behind them. The Burlingtons largely increased their lead on the return.

Four-oared gigs—Burlington Boating Association, E. S. Phelps (bow), C. H. Wyman, W. S. Schramm, E. L. Parsons (stroke), Geo. H. Tousey (coxswain), first, in 14m. 9s.; Grand River Boat Club, Lansing, F. J. Blair (bow), F. J. North, E. J. Rauchfuss, C. A. Towne (stroke), W. H. Edwards (coxswain), second; Pullman Athletic Association, Pullman, O. L. Holmes (bow), D. R. Martin, J. E. Hinkins, Jas. Price (stroke), C. Bronson (coxswain), third; Keokuk Rowing Club, Keokuk, Ia., W. Robertson (bow), S. B. Spencer, Wm. Patterson, J. A. Comstock (stroke), J. A. Gibbons (coxswain), fourth; Catlin Boat Club, Chicago, T. W. Redding (bow), J. W. McCummings, T. Reynolds, J. Kilfoye (stroke), J. Kilfoyle (coxswain), fifth; Excelsior Boat Club, Detroit, A. F. Routhier (bow), J. R. Poor, J. Wilson, A. Bevan (stroke), W. H. Lewis (coxswain), disqualified. The Excelsiors soon took the lead, their rowing being far superior to the rest. They were taking matters very easy at the turning-stake, being then four lengths ahead of Burlington, who turned a length ahead of Pullman and the Grand Rivers. The Burlingtons recovered some of their lost ground on the return, but were unable to head the Excelsiors, who finished first, in 14m. 5s.; Burlingtons second, in 14m. 9s.; Grand Rivers, Pullmans, Keokuks and Catlins crossing in the order named. Immediately after the race the Burlingtons entered a protest against the Excelsiors on account of the latter's coxswain being a member of the Minnesotas instead of the Excelsiors. The claim was finally allowed, and the race given to the Burlingtons. It is due to some of the crews to state that there was a great difference in the weight of the boats used in this race. The Pullmans had much the heaviest craft.

Junior single-sculls—Lambert Metzger, Western Rowing Club, St. Louis, first, in 15m. 26s.; Lucas Edel, St. Louis Rowing Club, second, in 15m. 47⅛s.; P. W. Parker, Minnesota Boat Club, St. Paul, third, in 15m. 48s.; W. C. Richmond, Evanston Boat Club, fourth. At the mile stake Metzger led by three lengths over Parker, who led Edel about a length, Richmond being practically out of the race. On the last mile Metzger increased his lead, Parker and Edel keeping close together, the latter finally gaining second honors by half a second.

Junior four-oared shells—Minnesota Boat Club, St. Paul, W. S. Getty (bow), W. H. Lightner, W. M. Becker Jr., George James (stroke), first, in 13m. 14⅜s.; Galveston Rowing Club, Galveston, Texas, Jno. Crotty, Ed. Graves, Wm. Crotty, Ed Baker, second, in 13m. 25s.; Wyandotte Boat Club, Wyandotte, S. J. Lawrence, R. Welch, E. Finn, F. J. Hull, third, in 13m. 45⅛s.; Evanston Boat Club, Evanston, Ill., C. G. Plummer, C. S. Morse, W. D. Sargent, H. R. Powers, did not finish; Farragut Boat Club, Chicago, H. F. Billings Jr., P. C. Freer, W. F. Fowler, E. C. Morton, did not finish; Centennial Boat Club, Detroit, L. Lochbihler, C. Robinson, W. Johnson, W. Robinson, did not finish; St. Louis Rowing Club, F. A. Merkel, William Sarbled, A. Eveson, H. Fletcher, 0; Excelsior Boat Club, Detroit, A. F. Routhier, J. R. Poor, J. Wilson, W. R. McMillan, 0; Western Rowing Club, St. Louis, Lambert Metzger, Fred Gastrick, John Campbell, Alex. Malcolm, 0; Sylvan Boat Club, Moline, E. W. Osborne, John Cooper, S. H. Velie, George Cooper, 0; Little Rock Athletic Association, George C. Harbottle, Hugh Barclay, F. Daniels, R. B. Kendall, 0; Delaware Boat Club, Chicago, G. Langheinrich, W. Sullivan, J. F. Korf, Weinand 0. Considerable trouble was experienced in getting so large a field of starters off, but they were finally sent away evenly. The Minnesotas, Evanstons and Little Rocks on the way down gained a slight lead over the others, who were well bunched. The Minnesotas turned first, slightly ahead of the Evanstons, the rest following shortly in a bunch. On the return they spread considerably, the Minnesotas winning, in 13m. 14¾s.; Galvestons second and Wyandotte third.

SECOND DAY'S RACES.

The weather on the second day was fair and the water moderately good, except near the turn, where the cross wind made it choppy. The attendance was satisfactory. Results follow:

THE NATIONAL REGATTA.

The eleventh annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen, which will be held on the Passaic River at Newark, N. J., Aug. 7, 8, will be one of the best that has taken place since the organization of that body. The entries are unusually numerous, and include about all the fastest crews and scullers in the country, none being absent from the list who would be likely to win any one of the different events. In the single-sculls we find Laing, champion of Canada; Buckley, champion of New England; J. J. Murphy, winner of last year's National junior race, and probably the fastest amateur sculler in Massachusetts; Henderson, champion of the Schuylkill Navy; and Mumford, champion of the South. In the double-sculls are the present champions and the fastest double in Canada. The pair-oar entries include the ex-champion Albanys; the Ariels, winners at the Boston Regatta; and the Mutuals, present champions. The senior fours include the Hillsdales, champions of the Northwestern Association; Centennials, champions of the Mississippi Valley Association; Mutuals, winners of the Decoration-day regatta of the Passaic Association; Torontos, champions of Canada; and the Crescents, who at the Schuylkill Navy regatta made faster time than had previously been made on that course. This is certainly a brilliant array of famous amateur oarsmen from various parts of the country, making the coming regatta the most truly national of any yet held, while also holding forth gratifying promise of great sport for all lovers of boating. The Canadian Association of Amateur Oarsmen having officially notified the regatta committee of the N. A. A. O. of their desire to enter in the National crew the crew which should win the Canadian championship at Ottawa July 25 (the National regatta entries closing July 23), the committee unanimously voted to suspend the rules and accept such entry. In doing this the committee were actuated solely by a desire to show to a sister association an act of courtesy which they were confident would be heartily sustained by the amateur rowing fraternity of the United States, not doubting that the crew from across the border thus entered would be sure of a warm welcome at Newark. Certainly the committee, knowing the liberal views of their countrymen in matters of this kind, had no reason to anticipate that anyone would find fault with the generous action taken. They naturally felt satisfied that every member of the fraternity would uphold them in doing that which, by attesting the liberality of American regatta committees in granting to foreign oarsmen a privilege never accorded to home-clubs, contrasted most favorably with the course pursued by English committees in requiring crews from America to send in entries three months previously to the closing of the lists for native clubs, and which could not fail to create a most favorable impression abroad. Undoubtedly the concession made was one to be applauded by every right-thin

POST-MORTEM EXAMINATION OF CAPTAIN WEBB'S REMAINS.

On Sunday, July 29, the remains of the lost swimmer were subjected to a post-mortem examination at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., and the following report of the autopsy is furnished for publication by Dr. C. N. Palmer one of the three surgeons engaged in making it:

LOCKPORT, July 29.—A post-mortem examination on the body o Capt. Webb was made about four o'clock this afternoon by Dr. Edward Smith of Lewiston, Dr. M. S. Long of Suspension Bridge, and Dr. C. N. Palmer of Lockport. There was found marked rigor mortis. The body was in a state of active decomposition. All the tissues were greatly distended by gases. There was a scalp-wound on top of the cranium three and one half inches in length, not involving the bony structure. No bones were found broken. There were several other local injuries of the body, but unimportant as to the cause of death. The scalp-wound was evidently produced after death. The muscular texture was peculiar. By a cut longitudinally with a sharp scalpel shreds of desiccated muscle would be carried along with and collect on the edge of the scalpel. All the blood presented a distinctly red color—in some places remarkably red—showing that the blood was not deoxidized by asphyxia in drowning, but that death ensued prior to that condition. None of the characteristic symptoms of death from drowning was present; nor was there any local injury sufficient to necessarily produce death. The muscles were pale, and presented the peculiar appearance for which we could find no better name than ux-desiccation, the filament being ragged and broken, and separating with remarkable facility. The examination on each extremity and upon the various portions of the trunk and neck presented uniformly these conditions.

As the result of our examination I am led to the conclusion, and in this I am seconded by my colleagues, that death was caused not by asphyxia or drowning or by any local injury by the body coming in contact with any hard substance, but by the shock from the reactionary force of the water in the whirlpool rapids coming in contact with the submerged body with such force as to instantly destroy the respiratory power, and, in fact, all vital action, by direct pressure and force of contact—a shock of sufficient intensity to paralyze the nerve-centres, partially desiccate the muscular tissues and forestall any probable sequel of death by drowning. The cause of death in passing through these rapids being thus constant, and in no way accidental, as might be drowning or any injury received from rocks, forces the conclusion that no living body can or ever will pass through the rapids alive; a fact established of no little importance, and an ominous warning to all future adventurers. The river-bed at the whirlpool rapids is much narrowed, and also suddenly assumes greatly increased precipitancy. The water strikes the unyielding rocky banks with great violence, and by reaction meets with such resistance as to form in the centre a mountainous ridge of encroaching waters from twenty to thirty feet in height. Into this Captain Webb was submerged after passing the first breaker, and instantly subjected to the immense pressure indicated upon his body as the cause of his death.

Mrs. Madelaine Webb, the bereaved widow of the lamented natator, left Boston, Mass., in company with Mr. Kyle, by the 8.30 A. M. train July 30 for Niagara Falls village, where the inquest was to be held on the following day. The remains will be taken to Boston, probably on Wednesday, and the interment will be in the cemetery at Hull, Mass., in accordance with the wish expressed by Captain Webb. The statement that he made a will is denied. It is said that his only property consisted of £1,500 in English consols, at 2½ per cent., which some time since were put in trust for the benefit of his children on their arriving at maturity, and inaccessible to his widow, leaving her with but a meagre income. It has been proposed, in view of the lack of any adequate provision for her support, to open a subscription in her behalf. A number of sympathizers have already sent contributions towards this object. A cablegram from London, dated July 30, says: "Mr. Chaddock, the father-in-law of the late Capt. Webb, will sail for America to-morrow on the steamer City of Paris. He goes to bring home the widow and orphans. A relief fund for the family has been started by The Sportsman."

COURTNEY READY FOR BUSINESS.
A Forfeit of $350 Up for Each of Six Matches.

There appears a possibility that the recent stormy meeting between Edward Hanlan and Charles E. Courtney may yet be productive of something that will afford great gratification to all lovers of rowing sport. Whether it does or not depends upon the readiness of the champion to back up with money the statement he is alleged to have made to the effect that half-a-dozen men (whom he named) could outrow the Union Springs sculler, and that he would provide the necessary funds to enable them to meet him. Courtney subsequently consulted with his backer in regard to the matter, and the result of their deliberations was a determination to give Hanlan a chance to make good his word. Accordingly, on Monday afternoon, July 30, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, being a deposit of two hundred and fifty dollars for each of six matches, was placed in our hands for the purpose set forth in the communication which appears below. If the champion was in earnest in the statements imputed to him at Ogdensburg he cannot, with credit to himself, decline to live up to his words; and in case he does not do so, that fact will be evidence that the estimate he there publicly placed on Courtney's powers as an oarsman was lower than he considered the record warranted:

NEW YORK, July 30, 1883.

EDITOR NEW YORK CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: On the occasion of the recent boat-race between Edward Hanlan and Wallace Ross Charles E. Courtney and myself visited Ogdensburg in company. While there we chanced to meet Mr. Hanlan, and in the course of the interview which ensued the latter stated that there were half a dozen scullers in this country who could defeat Mr. Courtney, adding that he would furnish the stakes for them. The parties named by Mr. Hanlan were Wallace Ross, George Hosmer, George W. Lee, P. H. Conley, Al. Hamm and J. H. Gaudaur. I now propose to take Mr. Hanlan at his word, and hereby announce that Mr. Courtney stands ready to make a match with each of the parties mentioned (or any six whom Mr. Hanlan may choose to name), simply stipulating that all six matches shall be made at the same time. Each match to be for one thousand dollars a side, and the distance, time and place of rowing to be agreed upon mutually at a meeting to be held at THE CLIPPER office at such time as Mr. Hanlan may choose to designate. Mr. Hanlan may rest assured that I shall not offer any trivial objections nor throw any obstacles in the way of arriving at an agreement on all points, and if he is willing to make good his word little difficulty need be experienced in reaching a satisfactory settlement. Herewith is deposited in your hands the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, being two hundred and fifty dollars on account of each of the six matches which Mr. Courtney desires to make. Hoping that Mr. Hanlan will promptly cover this money and appoint a date upon which to meet at your office for the purpose of signing articles, I remain, yours respectfully, JOHN CREE.

P. S.—Should Mr. Hanlan decline to make these matches, Mr. Courtney will row a match-race with George W. Lee for one thousand dollars a side, and I will meet Mr. Lee or his representative at THE CLIPPER office at such time as he may appoint to arrange terms. J. C.

CANADIAN ASSOCIATION OF AMATEUR OARSMEN.

The fourth annual regatta of this association was held on Wednesday, July 25, at Ottawa, Ont. The weather was fine, the gathering of spectators was fairly large, and the water was in excellent condition, as may be inferred from the reported time made in the different events, that for the senior fours being the best yet recorded, provided the course was a full mile and a half straightaway.

The senior single scull race had four entries, and was easily won by Van Iderstein of Toronto in 9m. 58s. The double-scull race was won by J. Buckley and W. O'Connell, Portland (Me.) B. C., by three-quarters of a length. The great event of the day was the senior four-oared race, for the challenge cup and medals, for which crews from the Toronto, Ottawa, Chatham, Argonaut and Lachine Boat Clubs put in an appearance. The race was a good and exciting one, the Torontos winning by three-quarters of a length, Ottawa and Chatham being second and third. Time, 7m. 45s. The winning crew, composed of E. D. Ross, I. C. McGee, Ed. Thompson and R. Tinning Jr., have been entered for the National Association regatta at Newark, N. J., next week. The junior single-scull race was won by O'Connor of the Don Rowing Club of Toronto. Time, 9m. 10s. The junior four-oar race was an extremely interesting one, and was well won by the Argonauts. Time, 8m. 21s. The last race on the programme was the double-sculls, which was won by Enright and O'Connor, Don Rowing Club. Time, 8m. 14s.

MONINGER DEFEATS FOLEY.—The match between Ed. Moninger and Martin Foley, to row three miles, with a turn, for $200 a side, came off on the lower Monongahela course, at Pittsburg, Pa., July 28. Foley led at the start, but was soon overtaken and finally beaten by five lengths, in 21m. 55s.

ROWING AT GLOUCESTER, MASS.—About 2,000 persons lined Pavilion Beach and Western avenue, Gloucester, July 27, to witness the single-scull, four-oared working-boat and tub races. The single-scull race had three entries—J. Keagan, James Murray and J. J. Bagley of Boston. The first prize, $10, was won by Keagan; the second, $5, by Murray. The tub-race created much amusement. Walter Beattie won, Morris Bently second. The first prize for the four-oared race, $25, was won by the Riley crew; the second, $10, by the Bagley crew. The Grout crew, owing to the stake-flag being thrown down by the oar of a passing boat, was greatly hindered at turning, and gave up the race.

HARRY MEEKER of this city announces that he will give a valuable silver cup to be contended for by amateur single-scullers on Greenwood Lake, N. Y., in September. Other prizes will also be offered.

HOMING-PIGEON FLYS.

Birds owned by the Boston Homing Club were liberated July 28, at 6 A. M. home-time, in Stratford, Ont., 505 miles distant from home, in a race for federation record for 500 miles and for the special prize of honor offered to the bird owned in the vicinity of Boston that should be the first to return from the distance. The returns reported by countermark and certified telegram to this city 29 were: One bird at 8.38 A. M. to the loft of George Darby, Roxbury, Mass., winning the special prize of honor. One bird at 10.33 A. M. to the loft of F. Schworm, Boston. One at 12¼ P. M. to R. Hooper, Boston. The last journey of the birds entered in the race was on July 9 from Rochester, 336 miles, leaving 169 miles of new country at the outset.....Pigeons owned by Samuel Hunt of Fall River, Mass., were liberated in Havre de Grace, Md., Saturday morning, July 28, but, owing to the storm which prevailed throughout the East that afternoon, none were at home at night. The returns were all but one on the morning of the 29th, the first lot at 7.20, the last at 9.45. The distance air-line is 300 miles. The next race will be from Alexandria, Va., 367 miles.

BILLIARDS.

A CHALLENGE TO FINGER-PLAYERS.

The subjoined communication from Frank B. Adams needs no introduction, save to state that Thomas Foley of Chicago has notified us that he holds $100 of MR. A.'s money:

CHICAGO, Ill., July 28, 1883.

EDITOR NEW YORK CLIPPER.—Sir: My intention was to have visited New York this Summer; but, owing to business which takes me North, I am deprived of that pleasure. Had I gone, I should have arranged to play a match with one of the many who appear anxious to meet me. As I do not intend to follow the billiard business as a profession, I will make one play and quit. Since it is impossible for me to leave my business to get in condition for a $25, $50 or $100 match, as some people in my line have proposed, I would say I will play any finger-billiardist in the world for $1,000 a side, and will pay my opponent's expenses from any part of the world if he will play in Chicago. To convince the public that I am a business man, I have this day given to Mr. Thomas Foley of the Collender Billiard Hall $100, in cash, as a starter to work on. Respectfully, YANK ADAMS, Champion of the World.

CHICAGO NOTES.—One of our correspondents writes: "It has been very cool here this Summer, and billiards proper and ball-pool have both thriven, particularly at the Collender and the Brunswick Hall.....Page, who figured in the Vignaux-Schaefer scandal, has been unable to leave the city, and still takes his two hours' daily practice at three-ball billiards in the Brunswick Hall. He is looked upon there—in a mirror—as a great man.....Henry Rhines, superintendent of the Brunswick, is spending his vacation at Mt. Clemens.....A former Chicagoan, Lannie McAfee, arrived in this city during the early part of last week, on his way home to Davenport, Ia. He was accompanied by his pet dog. Lannie and the dog had both been visiting Michigan.....Nate Pollock—formerly of Jersey City, but latterly of this, he being manager of the Academy Rooms, originally opened by Yank Adams—has also got back to town. His place is the best paying one on the West-side.....All the pool-players will come West about Sept. 1, for it is programmed to have tournaments in Milwaukee and St. Paul, as well as others on the route of the knights (not Sam and George) as they travel homeward."

OBITUARY.—On the eve of going to press, we are advised that Robert Hunter died in Philadelphia, of pneumonia, on July 30. He had for about a dozen years been prominently identified with billiards in Philadelphia, alike as roomkeeper, room-superintendent, marker in public games, and player. In the series of contests during 1881-2 for the badge of the room-keepers of that city he was Edward McLaughlin's most formidable competitor. With McLaughlin, Nelms, Estephe, Bullock and Dodds (of Pittsburg), he was likewise a contestant in the public tournament for the championship of the State at the straight three-ball game, held in Philadelphia in November, 1880, he and Bullock being the only ones who failed to secure a prize, the chief falling to McLaughlin. He had been an active member of the National Billiard Association since its organization. He was generally held in kind regard in Philadelphia, where he was best known, and was also esteemed by the comparatively few professionals in this city who enjoyed his acquaintance.

PHILADELPHIA ITEMS.—Robert Hunter, who has been in charge of Green's new room since its opening, has been seriously ill for several days past, his ailment being pneumonia.....The National Billiard Association is to hold its next meeting on Sunday, Aug. 5, at Cape May, N. J.....John Creahan has been visiting Williamsport, Pa., where he sought in vain his favorite drink, koumis.

DANKELMAN MAYBE MARRIED.—From Chicago a correspondent sends us word that John Dankelman, pool-player, is expected in that city soon on his bridal-tour. So far as it goes, this is confirmation of the rumor, to which our columns gave circulation two or three weeks ago, that Dankelman had become matrimonially inclined.

EXHIBITIONS AT THE WEST.—Yank Adams has started out from Chicago on an exhibition tour. He was to have opened in Callahan's room, Milwaukee, Wis., on the night of July 30. Thence he goes to Winona, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Stillwater, and through the entire Northwest.

A TOURNAMENT IN CHICAGO.—With the view of enlivening billiards at the West, arrangements are making for a tournament of amateurs at the Collender Billiard Hall, Chicago. It is to begin about Sept. 1 next, and of it we shall have more to say anon.

RETURNED HOME.—H. W. Collender, who, in company with his son William, had been in Chicago for a week, left that city on July 27 for this, well pleased with their visit.

THE SHAWS.—Louis and Nellie Shaw are still in Chicago, giving exhibitions in that city and its vicinity.

THE TRIGGER.

THE INTERNATIONAL MATCH.
Honors to American Riflemen.

The cable brings us the following particulars of the way in which the American team of National Guardsmen have been treated in England since their defeat at Wimbledon:

LONDON, July 24, 1883.—The American rifle team were entertained at luncheon to-day by the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House. On the arrival of the team (who were accompanied by some members of the Canadian rifle-team) at the Lord Mayor's residence his Lordship shook hands with and addressed a few words to each guest and introduced him to the Lady Mayoress. At luncheon Colonel Howard, captain of the American team, sat on the right of the hostess, and Lieutenant-colonel Otter, captain of the Canadian team, on her left. Major Humphrey, Lieutenant-colonel Walrond and other members of the British National Rifle Association were also present. The Lord Mayor toasted the Queen and President Arthur. He paid a high tribute to the hospitality which he experienced while in America, and spoke in eulogistic terms of the late President Garfield. He then toasted Colonel Howard and the American team and Lieutenant-colonel Otter and his team. Colonel Howard, in responding on behalf of the Americans, called attention to the fact that America was still young in rifle-shooting. He said his team only represented four States of the Union. He said he hoped the day would come when every American would be proficient in rifle-shooting. He thanked the Lord Mayor for his hospitality and the nation for the treatment his team had received since they had been in England. Colonel Howard then toasted the Lord Mayor, who invited the teams to inspect the Mansion House.

LONDON, July 25, 1883.—The banquet given by British Volunteers in honor of the American rifle-team took place at the Criterion to-night. The American and British rifle-teams were present in full uniform. There were about one hundred persons at the tables, including Earl Waldegrave, Lieutenant-colonel Otter, the captain of the Canadian team, and several other Canadians. Sir Henry Halford, the captain of the British team, who presided, proposed a toast to the Queen, which was drunk by all standing. A toast to President Arthur's health was received with three cheers. General Sir William McMurdo, responding to a toast to the Army, dwelt upon the similarity of organization of the British Volunteers and American National Guard. Sir Henry Halford, in proposing the health of Colonel Howard and the American team, said the team were well worthy of the country they represented. They were led by a man than whom none was better qualified to lead. When the shooting at 800yds. was finished he (Halford) felt very funny. But Wimbledon weather had not deserted the old country. If it had been as favorable at the last two ranges as it had previously been he might have had a different tale to tell. The defeat was no dishonor to the Americans, as the British victory was very hardly won. It must be remembered that, although the Americans had facilities for practice, the British riflemen were veterans who had been at Wimbledon many years. In the match at Creedmoor, also, the Americans had very little chance owing to the previous experience of the British team with military rifles. Therefore it did not follow that, although the british had won two victories, the American riflemen were inferior. The whole of America must feel that the team had done all in their power, and he hoped that they would soon have a chance of retrieving their fortunes. He thanked Colonel Howard for his straightforward conduct during the whole meeting. The toast was received with three hearty cheers, all standing. Colonel Howard, on rising to respond, was greeted with enthusiastic cheers. He said he could hardly find words with which to express his thanks for the honors of the occasion. He hoped that the feeling of friendly brotherhood stirred up by the toast would spread among the American people, so that this first American military visit might mark a new era leading to a time when the American National Guard and the British Volunteers might claim to be one, and that both forces would reach the perfection so desirable in a constitutional country, where every citizen should be able to support the constitution with arms. He heartily thanked the British National Rifle Association for the reception given to the American team, and for the facilities afforded the team for practice. Mr. Mitchell, the United States Vice-consul, responded to a toast to commerce.

PRESS vs. SCHUETZEN CORPS.

The third match-shoot between teams composed respectively of members of the Boston Press Rifle Association and the East Boston Schuetzen Corps was decided at Bayside, Boston, Mass., July 24. For the second time the journalists were successful, nor did they "get left" in the struggle for gastronomic honors which followed the shoot. The score:

A CALIFORNIA RIFLEMAN IN SWITZERLAND.—Lieut. Fred Kuhnle, the Pacific Slope rifle-expert, is now traveling in Switzerland. He writes to friends at home that in the shooting-match at Zurich, lasting seven and one-half days, he made over 200 bull's-eyes more than any competitor, shooting at the ten-inch target, and at the two-and-one-half-inch target from the same distance he made fifty, the next best being twenty-four. He has in his possession eight cash prizes, one silver cup and two fine oil-paintings, and has won several other prizes that have not yet been tendered to him. After the shooting at Zurich Lieut. Kuhnle was marched before the President and crowned Shutzen King of Canton Zurich, being the first time the honor has ever been taken from the Canton.

ILLINOIS STATE SPORTSMEN'S ASSOCIATION.—The annual election for officers of this association was held at Chicago July 23, with the result shown herewith: President, B. Clark, Delavan; first vice-president, H. H. Fenstock, Peoria; second vice-president, James A. Sexton, Chicago; secretary, B. G. Cunningham, Delavan; treasurer, Fred Kemble, Peoria. On the same day the $500 diamond medal, presented in 1881 by the Board of Trade of Chicago, was shot for, and was won by W. L. Church of Hyde Park.

GEORGE LUTHER defeated R. E. Sheldon of Cleveland, O., in a glass-ball shoot for five hundred dollars at Syracuse, N. Y., July 26. Each contestant fired at one hundred balls, and the score was ninety-six to seventy-nine.

PIGEON-SHOOT.—At Young's Grove, Troy, N. Y., July 27, a number of expert pigeon-shots had a match, using "black-rock" birds from a trap, ten birds each. The score was as follows: J. Pickering, 6; Dr. J. Paulding, 4; Arch. Paul, 8; Thos. Curley, 10; J. E. De Groot, 7; F. Wolfe, 5; A. Wengenroth, 8; D. F. Wilbur, 3; J. Taylor, 9. Paul and Wengenroth shot off at 5iyds., Paul winning by killing 2 out of 3.

SEVERAL RIFLEMEN braved the storm at Walnut Hill range, near Boston, Mass., July 28, and shot in the Creedmoor Practice Match, with this result: W. D. Palmer, 46 out of 50; J. A. Watts, 45; C. A. Dolin, 44; C. H. Best, 44; S. Henry, 44; J. A. Potter, 43.

THE RING.

SULLIVAN AND SLADE.

The glove-encounter in which John L. Sullivan and H. A. Slade have agreed to appear at Madison-square Garden, this city, on Monday evening next, Aug. 6, is the one thing in the pugilistic line talked about just now, and indications point to another jam in this spacious structure when the impatiently-awaited evening arrives. The usual high prices will be charged for admission, and doubtless with as great success as upon any similar occasion heretofore. Slade, owing to his height, weight and admitted quickness combined, is generally regarded as the nearest to being on an equality with Sullivan of any man whom the latter has yet encountered with the gloves, and not a few fully expect to witness a slashing set-to, in which neither principal can afford to engage unless he is in condition equally as good, at least, as that in which his antagonist shows. It therefore behooves each man to take special care of himself in the intervening time. Our correspondent at Boston, Mass., wrote as follows July 29: "John L. Sullivan is at Scituate preparing for his match with Slade. It is a quiet seashore resort not far from the Hub. The champion, with his friend and backer P. E. Campbell, has been taking more than ordinary care of himself, and is now in fine trim. Certain persons have been endeavoring to interfere with and break off the friendly relations existing between Sullivan and his backer, as well as to circulate false reports concerning him. Sullivan was loth to believe that those whom he considered to be his friends would be guilty of such conduct, and will give them a wide berth in the future." Slade has been taking a fair amount of exercise daily on Long Island, occasionally visiting the seaside, and only favorable reports are received concerning his progress in the work of preparation.

DICK GARDEN was beaten by Smoky Bishop in a mill for $25 a side at London, Eng., July 9. Eighteen rounds were fought in fifty minutes.

CRICKET.

CRICKET IN ENGLAND.

The return match between the Gentlemen and Players commenced at Lord's Grounds, London, July 9, and it was remarkable for the large number of runs scored, no fewer than 1,098 being obtained for the loss of thirty-three wickets. The match took up the better part of three days, and attracted a large company of spectators. It could scarcely have been possible to select more representative teams, the amateur one being especially strong, and the only absentee from the other side was Pilling, who is one of the finest professional wicket-keepers. Hornby won the toss for the Gentlemen, and all of Monday and part of Tuesday the amateurs remained at the wicket. All kinds of bowling was tried, bewildering changes were affected in the attack, but it mattered not to the Gentlemen, who knocked the leather up and down the field. The first nine batsmen ran into double figures, and the batting strength of the side was only too apparent when it was found necessary to put in the Cantab—C. W. Wright—as tenth man. Dr. Grace only opened the ball with 26, but after the dismissal of the Gloucestershire medical every one batted grandly. A. P. Lucas made 72 in his own inimitable style, C. T. Studd was good enough for 42, and another old Light Blue, A. G. Steel, played in finished style for 64, so that altogether the Cambridge contingent did their fair share of work. It was left, however, to an old Oxonian, E. F. S. Tylecote, to amass the largest inning, this gentleman achieving the rare distinction of making over a hundred runs in a Gentlemen and Players match. The total of the Gentlemen's score was 441, and the general impression was that the professionals were in for a rare drubbing. Such was not the case, however, for the players, even after being compelled to follow on their innings, made a capital fight of it, and were only beaten at the finish by seven wickets, and the feature of the professional batting was the "form" shown by Barnes, who made 62 (not out) at a first attempt, and 76 at a second. This is something like the Nott's player's correct form. George Ulyett appears to be going in for the professional batting average this season. Already the famous Sheffielder has amassed a huge total, and in the match under notice his contributions were 65 and 51. Arthur Shrewsbury's totals were good, being 40 and 48, but he was blessed with a little luck. It will be seen that the result was the finest display of batting all round that has been seen for many a year. Messrs. Lucas, Steel, Ridley and Tylecote for the Gentlemen and Ulyett, Barnes and Shrewsbury on the part of the Players, especially distinguishing themselves. Among the bowlers Mr. Forbes, who for the first time took part in an important contest like that under notice, came out best, his seven wickets being obtained at a cost of 65 runs, but on such a batsman's wicket none of the averages were particularly good. The wickets were all that could be desired, playing fast and true, but though the weather was favorable the light at times was bad. The appended score tells the rest of the story:

MAJOR JEWELL, the noted rifle-shot of the International team of 1881 and an old baseball player of the palmy days of the Excelsior and Star Clubs of Brooklyn, has taken up cricket for field exercise, and on July 26 he made his debut as a member of the Manhattan Club in a match with the New York Club, the Major scoring nine runs at the bat—he being run out—and doing excellent work in the field.

THE ELEVEN selected to represent the United States in the Canada match are to play a practice game next Saturday against a picked eleven of Philadelphia at Nicetown.

THE ST. GEORGE and Newark Clubs are announced to play a match in Newark on Aug. 9. It is to be hoped that the Newark Club will give their young members a chance to play, and not take in their outside members, as they did in the Staten Island match.

THE PERSEVERANCE CLUB of Paterson will visit Staten Island Aug. 4 to play a second eleven of the Staten Island Club.

THE NEW YORK CLUB will visit Prospect Park Aug. 4 to play a one-inning game with the Brooklyn Club at 1 P. M.

CHAPTER VIII—CONTINUED.

Comprehending the meaning of Mathias' mutterings, Uncle Jean uttered a terrible cry. Mathias awoke with a start, drew himself up, trembling, rubbed his eyes, and stared with amazement at Uncle Jean, who was calling loudly for help and filling the room with cries of horror. As soon as Mathias had satisfied himself that no attack from without was to be feared, he understood the cause of the old man's fright, and it occurred to him that he might even have spoken in his dream. This thought startled him still more. He let the sick man cry a while longer, thinking he would stop shortly from sheer exhaustion; meanwhile, he looked at him with folded arms and a cruel smile on his lips.

"Well, Uncle Jean," he said, finally, "how much longer is this to last? Make a noise, call, shout—quite useless, no one can hear you."

But the old man, still more terrified by the expression of Mathias' face, began to call again for help in a desperate voice. One would have thought the fear of death had increased his strength tenfold. His movements were still full of energy, and his piercing voice must have penetrated into the depths of the convent.

"Silence!" cried Mathias, shaking his fist in his uncle's face; "silence! or I'll strangle you!"

Uncle Jean became quiet, and Mathias withdrew his fist.

"Don't let me hear you again!" he said, assuming a threatening attitude.

The old man lapsed into silence a moment, as if to catch breath, for his chest throbbed violently. He shot an angry look at Mathias, who pursued sneeringly:

"May I know at last what hornet has stung you? Perhaps I have been dreaming? What a fool you are to make such a disturbance! It would be better for you to try to sleep; it would do you more good than these senseless freaks."

These words inflamed the old man's wrath still more.

"Serpent!" he vociferated. "Ah! you let me die of hunger, like a dog? I live too long, do I? Bread and water will kill me slowly! You want my money, and for that reason I am condemned to die, murderer!"

Mathias eyed the old man uneasily, and appeared to tremble in the certainty that his knavery was completely unmasked.

"But," pursued Uncle Jean, "my money will slip from you! You imagined I would die to-night? No, no, God will give me strength yet to punish you, rascal! To-morrow—to-morrow, I'll tear up my will; you shall have nothing, nothing but my curse! To-morrow I'll send for Cecile, the notary, witnesses—and the gendsarmes to take you to prison, where you belong. I'll accuse you, I'll have you punished as you deserve. Ah! you thought I was dead? You shall see ——"

"Ah! ah!" broke in Mathias with bitter disdain, "no one will hear you."

"It will be daylight to-morrow," replied the uncle; "I'll call and shout so long and so obstinately that someone will surely hear me in the end."

Without speaking, Mathias gazed straight into the eyes of the old man, whose last words seemed to have made a deep impression upon him. At first his face, which had grown serious, showed that he was meditating gravely. Little by little his lip curled, the ignoble smile reappeared. Then he approached the bed, pushed the table aside, planted himself again before the old man with folded arms, and addressed him in a scoffing tone, thus:

"Your stupidity makes me laugh. You thought, then, that I had lived here ten years like a slave; that for ten years I had stroked and patted you like a dog out of affection for you? You thought that for ten years I accepted food fit to throw to the pigs through taste? You imagined that I spent the best years of my life in this frightful solitude because I did not love life? You thought that I acted the hypocrite, that I deceived, calumniated, and whatever more you will, without aim and without hope of reward? So you considered me more artless and more stupid than a child? No, no; if I have sacrificed my will, my tastes, my honesty, life, my soul, all to you, you shall pay for them—you shall pay me their weight in gold!"

"You shall have nothing! nothing!" growled the old man.

"Nothing?" repeated Mathias. "It makes you very comfortable to say that; but you have lost your head. Do you not fear, then, what I can do? You forget you are at my mercy, and that no one can see how I take my payment. You call me a rascal and a murderer? You don't believe your own words, since you provoke the lion that can devour you—that will devour you if you do not satisfy his hunger! I hunger after your gold, Uncle Jean. Satisfy me, satisfy me, or ——"

Saying this, he fixed his blood-shot eyes so fiercely on the old man that the latter threw himself back upon the bed, giving vent to fresh cries.

"Satisfy me! satisfy me!" vociferated Mathias, completely beside himself and grinding his teeth as if ready to commit murder.

"Heaven, help! help!" screamed the sick man, stretching out his trembling hands. "Mathias, Mathias, what do you wish?"

"Your keys!" howled Mathias—"your keys, I tell you!"

The old miser gave no answer; but Mathias' demand appeared to fill him with more terror than his menaces. He made a convulsive movement under the bedclothes and remained motionless, his body gathered up as if to resist an attack.

"Ah! ah!" exclaimed Mathias, "I know it: you would rather give me your soul than your keys; but I shall have them—I must; hold then with both hands, I'll tear them from you all the same! Give them to me! give them to me!"

He threw himself upon the terrified miser, and thrust his hand under the covers in search of the keys. He pulled, shook, fought, struck, roared like a mad bull; but the old man grasped the keys with such desperation that they could not have been taken from him without tearing his arm from its socket.

Weary, exhausted, held in check, perhaps, by a terrible thought, Mathias let go the keys and discontinued the struggle. He placed himself before the bed again, and, pausing for breath, watched the old man, who had hidden the keys under the clothes.

A transformation that defies all description was being wrought in Mathias' countenance; his face, which usually bespoke naught but hatred and wickedness, took suddenly an expression so wild, savage, so infernal, that one would not have recognized him. His cheeks seemed to shrivel up, his teeth gnashed, a frightful paleness blanched his face, his hair bristled, and he cried in a hoarse and passionate voice:

"Ah! you won't pay me? You still live? Well, then, your death shall pay me!"

He sprang upon the bed like a wild beast, crouched upon the sick man, placed his elbows upon his chest, and pressed with all his might.

A lugubrious rattle was heard, the old man's limbs stiffened with a quiver, and he lay perfectly still. Mathias seized the keys, tore them from the string by which they were attached to Uncle Jean's neck, then slowly left the bed. He paused, resting one hand upon the table, trembling with fright or fatigue. His eyes remained fixed on the motionless body of his victim; a cold sweat stood out in great beads upon his forehead and cheeks. Perhaps he already repented; perhaps the consequences of his horrible crime made him shudder; at all events, he stood there a long time, as if overwhelmed, dumfounded, until finally a hoarse and frightful sound sprang from his contracted throat. Then he took up the lamp mechanically, and with an unsteady hand approached the door and opened it, when a cry of anguish escaped him. The beggar-woman stood before him! Crouched behind the door, perhaps she had overheard, perhaps she had witnessed through the keyhole, the terrible scene that had just occurred!

With glistening eyes Mathias looked wildly at the woman, who appeared not to comprehend his agitation. He raised the bunch of keys, as if intending to strike her on the head with them.

"What are you doing here?" he bellowed.

"I thought you called me," replied the beggar, recoiling. "Perhaps it was Uncle Jean who called? Come, come, don't be so angry; I'll go back as I came."

Mathias let the hand that held the keys drop to his side, and said to Catherine in a quivering voice:

"Uncle Jean has had an apoplectic stroke. I think he is dead. Go to him—no, go below, lock all the doors carefully, then see if he is dead. Give him some vinegar."

The troubled wretch did not know what he said, so violently shaken was his nervous system by the atrocious crime his cruelty had prompted him to perpetrate. He tottered towards a heavy door, found the key after groping some moments, and entered a dark passage that extended from one end of the building to the other. The little lamp scarcely lighted the walls, and threw about him a pale glimmer powerless to dissipate the gloom.

He advanced in this strange place with unsteady steps, and feeling his way. Perhaps he was afraid—perhaps his conscience already brought before his confused eyes the punishment that God reserved for his crime. What would not have been his terror had he seen the human form that followed him at a distance in the obscurity!

Suddenly he heard apparently a noise behind him, for he turned his head and came to a stand. But he soon continued on his way, and did not stop again until a door, as odd as the first one, prevented him from going farther. It was a little door, low and round, the surface of which was so covered with iron plates and heavy-headed nails that the wood could hardly be distinguished. A large lock, red with rust, was fastened to the wall, and a thick bar of iron was stretched across this entrance, which guarded the miser's treasures. With heart throbbing violently, Mathias turned the key in the lock with a painful effort, opened the door, which grated lugubriously on its rusty hinges, closed it carefully after him, and, descending a flight of narrow stairs, found himself in a spacious cellar.

Once in the place where Uncle Jean's treasures lay hidden, the scoundrel forgot his crime; his conscience was hushed, fear left him altogether. He no longer felt any other emotion than that caused by his eager desire to see gold, to touch gold, to have gold. His face wore an ecstatic smile, and his eyes sparkled covetously.

Lamp in hand, he rummaged about the cellar, but discovered nothing, nothing but the four bare walls, and near the stairs a heavy stone that had evidently been used as a seat. He began to tremble; his anxiety and the deception distorted his features.

"How!" he said in a hollow and dejected voice, "the money is not here? Impossible! Ah! what do I see? Is it not a keyhole?"

He burst into a loud laugh, and, crazy with joy, rushed towards the spot he had noticed; then, seeking the key and opening finally a hiding-place fabricated in the wall, he exclaimed:

"Aha! here's the treasure! Three bags—four—five bags! Gold! gold!"

Transported with joy, he seized one of the canvas bags with a shaking hand, and set to work to untie the string that fastened it; but a sudden fear made him start all at once; the bag fell from his hands, and he turned towards the stairs and listened, his teeth chattering loudly in the profound stillness. It seemed to him that he had heard a noise at the cellar-door, a sound like the grating of a bolt.

For some moments he remained motionless and shivering from head to foot; but not the least sound could be heard. Little by little his former feeling of safety returned to him, and he picked up the bag, soliloquizing:

"It's nothing—I was mistaken. Quick—let me open the bag!"

A disdainful expression curled his lip when, having plunged his hand into the bag, he drew out a handful of coin.

"Copper!" he muttered—"copper!"

He let the bag drop and took up another.

"Copper! still copper!" he cried, with growing agitation.

And he repeated his mournful exclamation "Copper!" every time he opened a bag. In proportion as his search progressed, his cheeks grew paler; a cold perspiration formed in beads upon his forehead, and his oppressed bosom heaved fast. At length he seized the last bag, and when, feeling like one intoxicated, he had untied the string, the cry of anguish—"Copper! copper!"—once more sprang from his husky throat. While with his left hand he clutched and rumpled the fatal bag that had just so cruelly crushed his last hope of finding gold, he thrust his right into the hiding-place and fumbled excitedly, to assure himself that nothing else was hidden there. It was empty; his hand encountered nothing. Not satisfied yet, he held the lamp in the cavity and thrust in his head. He saw nothing but smooth stones. A rueful sound died in his throat, and with unsteady steps he reached the stone at the foot of the stairs, sank down upon it with a feeble moan, and placed the lamp on the ground. He sat there a moment with his hand on his brow, his eyes glazed and lost in the obscurity. Then he said in a tone that bespoke at once depression and anger:

"A few pounds of copper! So this is the price of ten years of bondage and misery!—the price of a murder—the price of my soul! O Uncle Jean! traitor! hypocrite! thief! He has deceived me! He has robbed me! This, then, is the happiness so long expected! Wealth, luxury, greatness! I have killed him! Well, didn't he deserve it? Ah! I ought to have made him die inch by inch, in lingering torture, the traitor!"

He paused and remained with his eyes fixed on the clay footing. Presently the tears trickled down his cheeks; the cowardly wretch began to weep and sob like a child. This sorrow did not master him long, however. He gave vent to a frightful oath, sprang to his feet, seized the bag that lay at his feet, yelled and shouted inarticulately, and in his fury threw the heavy bag to the further end of the cellar. A hollow sound answered the shock of the metal.

"Ah!" exclaimed Mathias, with joyous surprise, "what's that?"

And, running with his lamp, he fell upon his knees in a corner of the cellar, where, in his mad exultation, he began to strike the echoing clay with his fists and to make affirmative signs with his head.

He had soon raised a little trap-door, and his eyes plunged with rapture into the dark hole. There also lay bags.

"Stupid deceiver!" he murmured, drawing out a bag, "he lays a snare, he throws a bait; he hides a little copper in a place that strikes the eye at first sight. But that has availed him nothing; here's the hoard!"

"Gold! it's gold!" he exclaimed suddenly in such a strange voice that one would have thought he heard the joyous cries of a child. "Gold! and this one? Gold! more gold! And the third? Gold! more gold!"

When he had taken out and opened a certain number of bags and nothing more remained in the hole, he squatted upon the ground and began to pour their contents upon his knees.

He contemplated this heap of gold with greedy eyes. To judge by the expression of his face, one would have thought he beheld the sky and all its beatitudes open before him. His rapture bordered on insanity.

"Ah! ah!" he murmured, "how grand! how it glitters! It's alive with brilliancy, splendor! And how much there is! That's something like—this is the price of my soul! It's good payment; it isn't worth so much. Ah! ah! ah! live, enjoy, taste of every pleasure, play the gentleman, have servants, eat, drink, go about in a carriage, be powerful, be flattered by all, crush all who resist me or who do not bow down to the dust before my haughty mien! All that lies here—here in this inanimate money, in this shining metal! Oh! I must touch it, feel it, possess it!"

And, completely beside himself, he began to run his hands through the gold, giving vent to a thousand exclamations of joy, and counting the money over and over again without apparent aim. He had remained thus a long while enjoying this treasure, oblivious of everything else, when the light began to grow dim. His face became serious suddenly, and, looking anxiously about the cellar, he got upon his feet, saying as he passed his hand over his brow:

"What am I doing here? Am I mad? Ah! I must hide this gold elsewhere, so that no one can find it but me. Quick, the light is going out—there's no more oil."

With these words he filled two of the largest bags, took one under each arm, and, thus loaded, climbed the stairs. On reaching the door he placed his burden upon a step and inserted the key in the lock. But he turned and turned it in vain. Despite all his efforts, the door did not move; it seemed as if sealed in the wall, so firm did it remain, although the bolt played under the pressure of the key. Mathias began to tremble again; an icy shudder shook him from top to toe; yet he could not, durst not credit his fears, and made further energetic efforts to open the door. He turned the key every way, bore against the door and endeavored to throw it off its hinges. This hard work caused the perspiration to roll down his cheeks. Nothing succeeded, nothing gave even a little hope. Finally he desisted from sheer exhaustion, and, letting his head sink on his chest with despair, moaned:

"This is horrible! Locked on the outside! No, no, impossible—I'm mistaken. Who could have done it? Catherine? And her share of the inheritance? Heaven, the light grows dimmer—the light—the light is out! I must make haste. One more effort!"

He inserted the key in the lock again, and worked it so long and so feverishly that his hands ached and were covered with bruises. Hoarse and wild cries accompanied this desperate work. Nothing availed; the door stood firm.

Convinced of the uselessness of his attempts, Mathias descended the stairs once more, and began to run about the cellar like a madman. Profound obscurity surrounded him; he could not discover the least ray of light; he was as though in a tomb hermetically sealed. The wretched man tore his hair and smote his chest, groaned, wept, blasphemed, flew into a fury, and uttered incomprehensible words. He rushed up the stairs, shouted Catherine's name through the keyhole, struck, shook the door anew, then began again to spring about his prison like a wild beast, until he stumbled against the stone and was thrown to the ground, where he lay panting and without attempting to rise.

"This is the end of my painful and constant labor," he murmured after a while in a sombre voice. "To possess gold I made myself a demon, I killed a man! and now—now I am here in a black dungeon, where no one can hear me. Perhaps—perhaps I'll die here—die of hunger. Horrors! Is this the judgment of God? Has He condemned me to die the death I had reserved for uncle—starvation? Die? die in the midst of gold! on piles of gold! To have the means within one's grasp of acquiring happiness, power, delights of all sorts, and to die like a dog, to fall into hell, to burn there everlastingly, to be cursed and insulted as too stupid a villain to succeed in villainy! Curses!"

This word echoed mournfully beneath the vault. No other sound broke the stillness. Later, naught but sighs and sobs could be heard in the darkness. Mathias had lain long upon his back near the stone, lamenting and blaspheming, when he saw suddenly a ray of light on the wall—a ray that seemed to enter the cellar through the keyhole. He sprang to his feet with a transport of joy, flew up the steps, and, applying his mouth to the keyhole, said in a voice quivering with hope and intense joy:

"Catherine, dear Catherine, is it you?"

"It's me," someone replied.

"Ah! Catherine, just see what is the matter with the door on the outside; it won't open."

"That's very certain," returned the voice, "for I barricaded it myself with the iron bar."

"How? Why? Catherine, dear Catherine, don't jest. For the love of God, open!"

"Really, you hope so?" said the voice. "I have caught a poisonous beast in a trap, and I won't open the trap to have myself bitten, and many others besides. You had better say your prayers, if you know how, Mathias; all is over with you. God and poor Catherine have at last found their hour!"

Perceiving the woman's intention, Mathias shuddered with terror, and cried in a tremulous voice:

"Catherine, I have a bag full of gold; it's for you."

"I don't want stolen money."

"Two bags full of gold, Catherine! Ah! open, open!"

He received no reply, and continued:

"Catherine, there are four bags for you. Listen, listen; it's all gold."

And he scattered a handful of gold on the steps, hoping that their ring would tempt the poor woman.

A burst of laughter greeted this last effort.

"Catherine," he resumed in a beseeching tone, "I'll marry you; we'll have all to ourselves. There's so much—oh, so much!"

"Thief, murderer, coward!" replied Catherine harshly.

"Ah, Catherine!" said Mathias plaintively, "I'm kneeling here in the dark. I stretch out my trembling hands to you and implore your help. Have pity on me! Be merciful; open the door; I'll love you; I'll be grateful to you all my life."

"I pity you," rejoined Catherine.

"Ah!" cried Mathias hopefully, "I knew you would save me."

"I pity you," repeated the poor woman ironically; "I pity you as you pitied Cecile; I am as compassionate towards you as you have been towards Uncle Jean, your benefactor. But I didn't come for that, Mathias; I wanted to show you something. Look through the keyhole and see what I hold in my hand; see what I do."

Mathias put his eye to the hole, and, as there was light without, he was able to see quite well what the beggar-woman did. She unfolded a paper, resuming:

"Do you see it? It's the base will by which you intended to rob Cecile of her fortune."

"My will! my will!" yelled Mathias, frantic with despair.

"Heaven!" howled Mathias, "she's tearing it up! My hope, my life! Catherine, you kill me!"

He perceived by the movement of the light that the woman was about to retire; so, making a last effort, he cried in a heart-rending tone:

"Catherine! Catherine! Oh, don't go! Open the door—open! Do you wish to make me die of hunger in this frightful dungeon?"

"It would be a just punishment from God," answered the widow, "were you to die as you wanted to make Uncle Jean end his life; but such a death is too sweet for you! You will soon be let out of your dungeon. I have been to the burgomaster's; he has sent the rural guard after a locksmith; so have no fear—you will be let out; but you will leave it with your hands bound behind your back. The prison awaits you. You will atone for the murder of your uncle on the scaffold, villain!"

Motionless, as if petrified, his eye glued to the keyhole, Mathias saw Catherine move away with the light. When its last rays had died out in the distance he uttered a terrible cry and fell headlong down the steps to the bottom of the cellar, where he lay like a corpse.

CHAPTER IX.—CONCLUSION.

The first glimmers of morning were shedding a bluish light through the window of the room in which Mathias had made his murderous attempt on the old man's life. Upon the table burned two yellow candles placed beside a crucifix. A box-tree branch stood in a glass of holy water. The motionless body of the old man was stretched upon its back on the bed. To see his pale and distorted features one would not have doubted that death had long since extinguished the last spark of life there. This supposition, however, would not have been altogether well founded, for the old man's chest still heaved hard, as if he were enduring the last pangs of death's struggle, and as if his soul were making a great effort to tear itself from its corporeal bonds. Bent over the old man was a young girl, who eagerly watched for every sign of life in him, trembling and weeping with anguish or hope, according as the sick man relapsed into an alarming immobility or his breathing became more distinct. It was Cecile, who for the past hour had shed a torrent of tears, and who, overcome with grief, had endeavored by her breath and kisses to call her poor old uncle back to life.

Jeannette stood at the foot of the bed, ready to assist Cecile in the attention she lavished on the moribund. Farther, in the middle of the room, knelt Barthelemy and his mother, offering up in a whisper and with clasped hands a fervent prayer to the Almighty.

The cure had already been there, and administered the holy oils to the old man; the physician called in, also, and had declared that the patient was exhausted for want of nourishment; whereupon he had ordered them to give him a little meat-broth by spoonfuls and a potion which he had prescribed. The bowl and vial that stood near the bed contained the two remedies.

Cecile had already administered several spoonfuls of the broth to her uncle. She thought she noticed that it did him some good, and passed by degrees more readily down his throat, as if he swallowed the beneficial beverage greedily.

Having just administered a fresh spoonful to the old man, she was about to retire, when it seemed to her that his lips moved. Trembling with excitement, she quickly gave him another spoonful, which he swallowed eagerly. Quivering with hope and completely beside herself, she continued to give him the broth, all the while watching his face with anxious eyes. Suddenly a spasmodic shiver seemed to run through the sick man's frame; then he grew stiff again and motionless; even his respiration appeared to have stopped. A cry so painful and harrowing passed Cecile's lips that Barthelemy and his mother started with terror and approached the bed precipitately. With her head bent over her uncle's bosom, Cecile sobbed aloud and bathed his neck with burning tears. With the heart-rending expressions of grief she mingled the soft words of love, and from time to time kissed the icy lips of him whose death she bewailed. But soon she uttered another cry—this time a cry of surprise and joy. Uncle Jean moved his lips and opened and shut his mouth as if his wasted body had mechanically demanded more nourishment. The young girl sprang to the table and soon administered to him, with feverish agitation, two or three spoonsful of the broth; in her joy she would probably have made him take the whole bowlful had not the fear of acting contrary to the physician's orders restrained her. She put down the spoon, bent over his face, and watched the effect produced on him by the nourishment he had just taken. On a sudden the patient opened his eyes, which gradually fixed themselves on the gentle face as though it were unknown to him.

"Father, father, you live! Thanks, O my God!" exclaimed Cecile in a penetrating voice.

The old man closed his eyes again, and remained for a moment perfectly motionless. Then his gaze riveted itself once more on the young girl, and he contemplated her a long time, as if asking his memory who she could be. Finally his arm made an unseen movement; he raised it slowly, wound it round his niece's neck, drew her head towards him, and kissed her, saying in a voice almost inaudible:

"Cecile!"

The word, this name, this kiss, seemed to strike Cecile with alarm. She freed herself from his embrace, and said in a voice vibrating with emotion, addressing herself to those about her:

"Pray! oh, pray!"

And she herself fell upon her knees and stretched her arms towards the crucifix. For some moments she was lost in fervent prayer; then she arose and returned to the bedside.

The old man had turned over on his side, and was looking about the room with an astonished and vague air. Pointing a trembling finger at the three persons kneeling on the floor, he asked in a feeble voice:

"Who's there?"

"My God, my God, he lives, he speaks, he will get well, my poor uncle, my good uncle!" exclaimed Cecile, seizing the old man's hands with rapture and affection.

Uncle Jean smiled softly; but his eyes turned again inquiringly to the persons kneeling.

"It's Barthelemy—Barthelemy praying for you, my dear uncle," said Cecile—"and his mother, too, and his sister Jeannette, all beseeching God to restore you to perfect health."

"Barthelemy?" murmured the old man, as if he had not understood; "Barthelemy? He is praying—for me?"

"Come, come," cried the young girl, "Barthelemy, Mother Anne, my uncle is growing better; he recognizes his poor Cecile. Come!"

All rose and approached the bedside.

The old man contemplated each face in turn, but appeared to survey with particular attention the young man who stood by his pillow, and down whose cheeks flowed tears of joy. Presently he stretched his shriveled hand toward Barthelemy and drew him slowly to him, until he was able to put his lips to the brow of Cecile's lover, when he kissed him. It was the sacred kiss of reconciliation, perhaps!

Cecile tottered, and was obliged to lean against the table to save herself from falling. Her uncle's affectionate action had impressed her so deeply that she quivered, and seemed ready to faint with emotion. The other witnesses to this scene were not less affected; tears glistened in every eye. Suddenly the beggar-woman entered the room precipitately.

"Cecile, Barthelemy, Jeannette, come quick!" she cried—"come quick, below!"

She drew near to the bed, and, seeing with astonishment the improved condition of the old man, added earnestly:

"Ah! God be praised! Mother Anne, you stay here; but Barthelemy, Cecile and Jeannette must see the end of my work. Quick! let us all go below!"

And, as none appeared to comprehend and made no movement to follow her, she took Barthelemy and Cecile by the hand and dragged them from the room. Below, before the door of the old convent, a large crowd had collected in expectation of something. The men, women and children were speaking with horror of Mathias' attempt on the old man's life, and were rejoicing in the knowledge that he was about to receive his reward for the dastardly crime. The gensdarmes had passed through the village, and the inhabitants had followed them to the convent.

Cecile and Barthelemy had been dragged by the poor woman to the room on the ground-floor, without knowing at what spectacle she intended they should assist. Suddenly they heard in the passage that led to the back part of the building the sound of heavy steps and the clang of arms; and while they listened with surprise and fear, and the mendicant smiled triumphantly, two gensdarmes entered the room, followed by two more, and between the latter Mathias, with his hands bound behind him and his head bowed, pale, confused, trembling, and as if crushed with terror.

Cecile uttered a shriek, and, covering her face with her hands, turned towards the wall, so as not to witness this scene. Barthelemy, as if petrified, contemplated fixedly the terrible procession that filed off before him.

"Look," cried the beggar-woman, "see how God punishes crime!—and he chose a poor beggar for his instrument!"

And as the gensdarmes approached the door with their prisoner she continued, raising her voice to a high pitch:

"Hypocritical monster, murderer! run, make haste! First the scaffold, the guillotine! then hell, hell—eternal fire!"

Accompanied by the gensdarmes, Mathias left the convent. When the peasants saw him appear they raised such shouts of derision and cries of vengeance that he bowed his head still lower, and shuddered as if fearing his last hour was on the point of striking. He was as pale as death, his hair was in disorder, his clothing soiled and torn, his hands were stained with blood, so bruised and lacerated had they become in his attempts to force the cellar-door from its hinges.

At the sight of this blood, which they mistook for that of his intended victim, the peasants, carried away with fury, incited one another by a thousand cries to wreak vengeance on the guilty one. They wished to lay hands on him, and would doubtless have meted out a summary and terrible justice had not the gensdarmes, comprehending the danger, drawn their sabres to defend the prisoner in case of need.

The infuriated peasants relinquished their plans of violence, but accompanied the gensdarmes as far as the village, heaping threats and imprecations upon the head of the would-be assassin, until he had passed out of their sight with his guards on the road leading to the city.

Ten years have rolled by since then. The old convent is transformed into a large farmhouse, whose cattle-shed shelters three horses and twelve cows. Servants of both sexes bestir themselves in emulation of one another; the din of labor echoes there merrily from morn till night. The windows are painted green, the walls repaired and whitewashed, every thing bespeaks comfort and happiness.

When the sun shines a declining old man, whose hands, enfeebled by age, tremble incessantly, is seen seated on a bench beside the door. Near him an old woman is engaged in knitting. The old man is playing with two little children, a boy and a girl, to whom he preaches economy, assuring them that it is the source of all riches. These are Cecile's children; Barthelemy is their father, and they call the old woman Grandmother Anne.

The old uncle has loaned Barthelemy a large sum of money at interest—at a very small interest. This income, which is paid him regularly, he saves for the little fellow playing on his knee. He loves this little urchin dearly! It is his godson, who is also called Jean. The good uncle is so happy in his old days; yet he still cavils a great deal, and never ceases to find fault with the servants, whom he thinks eat too much and incur needless expenses. But Barthelemy and Cecile let him scold, and never get vexed at what he says; so that all are happy.

Catherine, the poor widow, still lives at the Chapelle farm. Her children are already grown up, and work zealously.

Barthelemy comes to her assistance very, very often. She will assuredly be in very easy circumstances some day.

Jeannette is the wife of Franz, the gardener up at the chateau, and lives in the midst of flowers, much loved by her rich masters.

The wretch alone suffers. He is in prison, where he will remain until God summons him before His judgment-seat.

THE END.

BASEBALL.

BROOKLYN vs. WILMINGTON.

The disbandment of the Merritt Club's team has not only given the Brooklyn Club an opportunity to materially strengthen their nine, but it has added greatly to the interest of the Interstate pennant-race by affording the remaining six clubs a chance to compete under more favorable conditions for the championship pennant. The Harrisburg Club, since the Merrits left the arena, are in the van, but not by so great a lead but that the other teams may overcome the advantage by steady and earnest work. Before the close of June, what with exhibition-games and the one-sided character of the contest for the Interstate pennant, the matches had become unattractive and devoid of interest. In July, however, the exhibition-games were stopped, the clubs began to play better, and, in the place of one or two clubs leading far in advance and the others being distanced in the race, the struggle for the pennant became more even, and now a position has been reached which will make the closing part of the Interstate pennant-race decidedly interesting. The Wilmington Quicksteps, who had been scheduled to play the Brooklyns at Washington Park July 24, played the postponed championship match 25 with the reconstructed Brooklyn team, in the presence of about twelve hundred people, and the contest proved to be one of exceptional merit. The Brooklyns had their four new men from the Merritt Club in position, Householder taking Walker's place at first base, while Kimber and Corcoran pitched and caught, Goodman playing at right-field, while the Brooklyn contingent occupied their regular positions, except Walker, who played at centre-field. The contest opened promisingly for a close fight, as not a run was scored on either side until the sixth inning, though base-hits were made in nearly every inning; but the pitching was too effective for run-getting, backed up as it was on both sides by splendid field-support. In the sixth inning, however, the Brooklyns scored two clean earned runs on singles by Walker and Geer and a two-bagger by Householder. In this inning, too, a single by Fox, followed by Benner's long hit to left-field, giving him his third base easily, brought in an earned run, and but for Walker's splendid running-catch the score would have been tied. As it was, Brooklyn was left in the van, and, as not another run was added to the score on either side, the final result was the success of the Brooklyns. A double-play by Schenck, Householder and Geer was specially noteworthy, as it cut off a run.

ANTHRACITE vs. BROOKLYN.

Ladies' day at Washington Park, Brooklyn, July 26 was marked by a very large attendance of the fair sex, the grand-stand presenting an unusually attractive appearance. In fact, the Park is rapidly becoming a very attractive resort of the best patrons of the game. The contesting teams on this occasion were the Anthracite and Brooklyn teams, the former presenting a very neat appearance in their new uniforms of white flannel and blue stockings, far preferable to their hot-looking uniform of black and red. The team play an excellent game, and certainly on this occasion they "did themselves proud," for they came near Chicagoing their strong opponents, the Brooklyns being unable to score a single run until the last inning, and then but for Greenwood's good base-running they would have been Chicagoed. The Anthracite "battery" was worked with excellent effect, and so was that of the Brooklyns after the first inning, when Terry gave three men their bases on called balls, which proved to be costly errors, as these and a couple of single hits sandwiched between gave the visitors two earned runs, and the home-team failed to overcome the lead then secured. The umpiring was excellent throughout, with one exception, and that was in the case of deciding Farrow's accidental hitting of the ball, while trying to avoid its hitting himself, as a fair hit. Both the League and the American rules declare a ball which touches the batsman's bat as well as his person a dead ball. Of course it must be made plain that the movement of the batsman was not an intentional strike, and in this case it looked to outsiders quite plain that it was not. The erroneous decision led to a double-play after a runner had reached third base on a dropped fly-ball. The score:

ST. LOUIS vs. ECLIPSE.

The ninth championship game between the above-named clubs was played July 24 in St. Louis, Mo., and attracted a large attendance. Effective pitching by Mullane, who was supported by almost faultless fielding, kept the visitors from scoring a run, and only two of them reached third base. Gerhardt made two remarkable catches of hot liners, each of which resulted in an unassisted double-play. The score was:

These clubs met again July 26, when the visitors were without the services of Gerhardt, their captain and second-baseman, who was prostrated by a slight stroke of paralysis, which will result in his temporary retirement from the diamond. Short-handed as they were, the visitors played pluckily and by superior fielding managed to win after a close and exciting contest. Hecker led in batting with four safe hits. Score:

ATHLETIC vs. METROPOLITAN.

Over seven thousand people witnessed the Athletics defeat the Metropolitans July 25 in Philadelphia, Pa. The pitching was very effective on both sides, the Mets making only three safe hits off Mathews, while the Athletics could get but four from Keefe, including, however, a home-run, a three-baser and a two-bagger. The fielding was below the average, the only redeeming features being running-catches by Kennedy and Corey, and a splendid stop by Stricker. The Athletics took the lead in the first inning and held it throughout.

The Metropolitans turned the tables on the Athletics July 26, and easily beat them. The pitchers were the same as in the preceding game, and while Keefe pitched just as effectively as he did on the previous day, the Mets had little difficulty in batting Mathews' delivery and pounded him all over the field. Esterbrook and Stricker made costly errors. The latter, who was suffering from a sore hand, gave way to Crowley in the sixth inning. A running-catch by Birchall, a remarkable stop by Crane and the short-stopping of Nelson were the fielding features. The score:

BALTIMORE vs. ALLEGHENY.

The eighth championship game between the above-named clubs was played July 25 in Baltimore, Md., having been postponed by rain from the preceding day. The largest attendance of the season—upwards of eight thousand people—witnessed the contest, attracted, no doubt, by the presentation of a new pitcher and catcher by the home-team, Emslie and Sweeney, late of the disbanded Merritt Club, filling those positions. The visitors led to the sixth inning, when the Baltimores batted Driscoll out of the pitcher's box and scored no fewer than nine runs, assisted, however, by costly errors by Swartwood, Hayes and Taylor. This lead the home-team held to the finish. Taylor in the last three innings held the Baltimores down to three hits. A close decision at first base in the fifth inning caused the spectators to hoot and howl at the umpire, until he picked out a ringleader, and, calling "Time," had the offender summarily ejected from the grounds. This put a stop to these demonstrations. Clinton's batting and Gardner's fielding were the chief features. Score:

The above result was reversed July 26, when the Alleghenys won the game by making eight runs in the first inning. Henderson was pounded for six safe hits in that inning, and he gave three men bases on balls, twice doing so when the bases were filled, thus forcing in two runs. The Alleghenys earned two more runs in the fourth inning. The Baltimores fielded almost faultlessly and made a gallant up-hill fight, but could not overcome their opponents' long lead, although they scored six runs in the seventh off six safe hits, including a three-bagger by Henderson. Barr took Taylor's place as pitcher during the last two innings. The score was:

CINCINNATI vs. COLUMBUS.

The above-named clubs met for the ninth time this season July 25 in Columbus, O., the game having been postponed by rain from the preceding day. The visitors outplayed the home-team at all points and secured an easy victory. The home-team made but five scattering safe hits off White, and narrowly escaped being blanked, a three-bagger by Brown and a muff by Jones letting in their only run. McPhee guarded second base in fine form for the visitors, while Smith of the home-team played very poorly at that point, his four errors yielding a like number of runs. The score was:

The home-team were again defeated by the visitors July 26, when it required ten innings to decide the contest. The Columbus had a slight lead up to the eighth inning, when a costly error by Fields allowed the Cincinnatis to tie the score. The ninth resulted in blanks for each side, but in the tenth inning Dundon's delivery seemed to lose its previous effectiveness, and the Cincinnatis by terrific batting made six runs, thus easily winning by the appended score:

CHICAGO vs. PHILADELPHIA.

The above-named clubs met for the eighth time July 24 in Chicago, Ill., the home-team then winning after an exciting finish. Hagan, who pitched for the visitors, was found to be puzzling, and six singles were all that the League champions could make off his delivery. Corcoran was batted freely by the Philadelphias, but they failed to bunch their hits except in the eighth inning, when they earned one run. Warner, late of the Merritt Club, made his first appearance with the Philadelphias. Six errors gave the visitors five runs for only one safe hit. The Chicagos made the winning run in the ninth inning on a wild throw by McClellan and hits by Pfeffer and Dalrymple. Score:

It took eleven innings for the Chicagos to defeat the Philadelphias July 25, but the home-team did it good and strong by making nine runs, five earned, at the finish. It was the opinion of a majority of the spectators that the Philadelphias lost the game through a doubtful decision by the umpire in the ninth inning, in giving Kelly safe at the home-plate when he was apparently touched by Ringo. The spectators savagely hissed the umpire, and much excitement was created. Coleman evidently weakened in the eleventh inning, when the Chicagos, with three two-baggers and five singles, won the game beyond question. Pfeffer fielded in great style, accepting all of sixteen chances and taking part in four brilliant double-plays. The score:

THE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP.

The close of the July campaign in the West leaves but one week more of play there by the Eastern teams before their return home for the season. It is in order to see what has been done out West during July by the Western and Eastern clubs in their contests together, and the appended table gives some interesting figures in this respect:

WEST.	Providence	New York	Boston	Philadelphia	Won.	EAST.	Buffalo	Chicago	Cleveland	Detroit	Won.
Buffalo	0	4	4	3	11	Providence	0	1	2	5	8
Chicago	3	0	3	3	9	New York	2	0	2	1	5
Cleveland	2	3	0	5	10	Boston	1	1	0	2	4
Detroit	0	3	2	0	5	Philadelp'a	1	1	0	0	2
Lost	5	10	9	11	35	Lost	4	3	4	8	19

In the pennant-race the contest between the Providence and Cleveland teams has come to be the feature of the League campaign. Already the Providence nine has met the two strongest of the Western teams and yet holds the position in the van by one victory; while this week they meet a team they have beaten in six games out of seven. On the other hand, the Cleveland team this week have to play with the Bostons, and they have only won four out of the seven games they have played with the Reds; so that the chances are that the close of the week will see Providence's position in the front more firmly established. Chicago is still third in the race, and six games in the rear of the Providence team, while this week the champions have to encounter the New York team, with whom they have won but four out of seven games played. Boston are a good fourth in the race, but this week they play the strongest of the Western teams, and may not advance much. Nor will Buffalo, as they have to play the Providence team, and the chances are that the "Bisons" will still occupy fifth place at the end of the week, unless New York makes a rally in Detroit and takes their place. The tenacity with which the latter held on to fifth place seems to make it pretty sure that that will be their position at the end of the season. At present they are down to sixth position, with Detroit seventh and Philadelphia last, the latter team being badly distanced. The record to July 30, inclusive, follows:

	Boston	Buffalo	Chicago	Cleveland	Detroit	New York	Philadelp'a	Providence	Won
Boston	..	4	3	3	7	3	10	2	32

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION CHAMPIONSHIP.

Up to date, July 30, inclusive, the St. Louis team still occupied a leading position in the American pennant-race, with the Athletics a close second and the Cincinnatis third, while the Eclipse stand fourth, and, though the Metropolitans are fifth, they have entered the thirties in victories, and are now playing in better form than at any time previously since the early part of May last. The tail-enders are still the Alleghenys, Columbus and Baltimore teams, and with three months of the season gone by there is but slight hopes of their bettering their positions. The full record follows:

	Allegheny	Athletic	Baltimore	Cincinnati	Columbus	Eclipse	Metropolitan	St. Louis	Won

CINCINNATI vs. COLUMBUS.

The Cincinnati team scored their eighth victory over the Columbus nine in their match in Cincinnati played July 28, when their "battery"-work was such as to demoralize the visiting batsmen, who could only score three base-hits off White's effective pitching, which was admirably supported in nearly every position on the field. Mountain's pitching on the other side was also effective in a majority of the innings, as the home-team only scored six base-hits from it; but fielding errors proved costly. The score:

DETROIT vs. NEW YORK.

Superior fielding enabled the Detroits to defeat the New Yorks July 28 before a large assemblage. O'Neil and Jones pitched for their respective clubs, and the safe hits were evenly distributed. Errors by Ward, Ewing, Pierce and O'Neil and a single by Bennett yielded three runs to the Detroits. Safe hits by Ewing, Ward and Gillespie in the eighth inning earned the two runs credited to the New Yorks. Score:

THE METROPOLITANS again defeated the Baltimores at the Polo Grounds on July 31, the contest being close an exciting up to the eighth inning, as the appended score shows:

Baltimore	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0—1
Metropolitan	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	5	2—7

AT WASHINGTON PARK, Brooklyn, July 31, a very pretty game was played by the Prospect and Adelphi athletic nines, the former winning by 6 to 2.

THE PROVIDENCE TEAM lost a game in Cleveland, O., July 30, by costly errors in their fielding, no fewer than fourteen being charged to them. Daly and Bushong and Radbourn and Nava were the batteries. In the fifth inning Radbourn was hit in the neck with the ball and disabled. Sweeney, who took his place, was batted freely. The home-team made seven errors and six hits. Both clubs did some fine work in the outfielding, York, Farrell and Carroll making wonderful catches. The score was:

Cleveland	0	0	3	0	0	1	2	1	0—7
Providence	1	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0—2

THE TELEGRAPHERS' MATCH in Philadelphia on July 30 between representative nines of the striking operators of New York and Philadelphia for the benefit of the fund yielded over two thousand dollars. It was played at Recreation Park, and resulted in the success of the Philadelphia nine by 22 to 6.

CAMDEN is to have a co-operative team in the place of the Merritts. It is to be run by Metlock, the Chief-of-police of the town, who, if he handles the ash as well as his brethren hereabouts handle their clubs, ought to be very successful indeed.

ATHLETIC vs. ALLEGHENY.

Five thousand persons witnessed the game between the above-named clubs in Philadelphia on July 28. The visitors placed Neagle, late of Philadelphia and Baltimore, in the position of pitcher. Taylor, their regular pitcher, being forced to occupy the position of catcher, the home-club had Mathews and O'Brien as their "battery." The Athletics played a faultless fielding-game, and knocked Neagle all over the field. Corey's second-base play was the fielding-feature. Stovey made a home-run, while Moynahan was credited with a run home, but it was a lucky bound over Dickerson's head. The Athletics won by hard hitting and excellent fielding. Joe Battin was over anxious, and made two errors, which gave Mathews a life each time. Mathews' pitching puzzled his opponents, and contributed largely to the Athletics' success.

The visiting team from Pittsburg is materially assisting the Athletics to get even in the record with Philadelphia, the home-team on July 30 scoring their tenth victory over the Alleghenys by a score of 17 to 4. Singularly enough, the Cincinnatis defeated their visiting team from Columbus the same day by exactly the same score. The Alleghenys put in Barr to pitch, and he was badly punished for no fewer than a dozen earned runs, while the Alleghenys managed to get in a couple of earned runs and nine base-hits off Mathews' pitching. Corey's second-base play was a feature of the Athletics' fielding. The score:

ST. LOUIS vs. ECLIPSE.

Hecker's pitching in the game between the above clubs, played in Louisville, Ky., July 28, proved costly, as the visiting team from St. Louis scored eleven base-hits from it, and earned two runs. On the part of the home-team their batsmen did better with the pitching of Mullane, as they earned three of their runs, but, failing to give the home "battery" proper support in the fifth and sixth innings, they were obliged to submit to defeat. The crowd of "heelers" present revenged themselves by abusing the umpire. The score:

The game between these clubs played in Louisville, Ky., July 29, resulted in the success of the visitors, who blanked the home-team, winning by a score of 9 to 0. There were in the neighborhood of five thousand mourners on the ground, and, although the Eclipse lost, they witnessed a game that was in some respects fairly well played, the fielding of the St. Louis players being the best feature. METROPOLITAN vs. BALTIMORE.

The eleventh game of the series between these clubs was played at the Polo Grounds July 30 with the result of another victory for the home-team, the eighth game they have won of the series, though the Baltimores on this occasion had out their strongest team, including that fine pitcher Emslie, whose work was, however, marred by the poor field-support given him in the latter part of the game; while on the other hand the New York "battery" was splendidly supported in the field, especially by Holbert, whose catching was a feature of the contest. The attendance was larger than anticipated, fully two thousand people witnessing the match. The score:

BROOKLYN vs. ANTHRACITE.

The ninth match between these Interstate clubs was played at Washington Park, Brooklyn, July 28, in the presence of two thousand people, who witnessed the home-team win a very creditable victory. The visitors put in Yarnal as their pitcher, and the Brooklyn team punished him easily for two earned runs and eight base-hits in a game of six innings, rain stopping play at the end of the sixth. The game was very well umpired by Gill, late of the Trentons. Geer bore off the palm in the field for Brooklyn, and Schenck at the bat, Galbraith and Holland leading on the other side. Only two base-hits were scored off Terry's pitching. Score:

RICHMOND, Va., was on July 30 the scene of a contest between the Virginia professional team of that city and the Ross nine of Chester, Pa., the latter being defeated by 21 to 5.

THE BROOKLYN TEAM played the Anthracites of Pottsville a championship match on the Merritts' ground in Camden, N. J., July 30, and won in fine style by 7 to 4.

PROVIDENCE vs. CLEVELAND.

The representatives of Rhode Island added another victory to their list on July 28, when they beat the Cleveland nine on that club's grounds in the presence of about three thousand people. Sawyer, the Cleveland pitcher, was pounded all over the field, and he was also very poorly supported, while the home-team utterly failed to get onto Radbourn. McCormick's lame arm and Daly's bad shoulder are materially interfering with the Cleveland Club's success. Richmond umpired this game impartially. The following score tells the rest of the story:

BUFFALO vs. BOSTON.

In the game between these clubs played in Buffalo, N. Y., July 28 the home-team won, as shown by the appended score. Buffinton's pitching was badly punished in the first inning, eleven of the Buffalo players hitting the sphere, and thereby, with the assistance of five errors, securing seven runs. Boston's pitcher did excellently after that, and no more runs were scored by the Bisons. The lead could not be overcome, however, and, although they played a strong up-hill game, the Bostons finished two runs behind. About a thousand people witnessed the contest.

THE INDEPENDENT LACROSSE CLUB,

a new organization of this city, composed of resident Canadian lacrosse players chiefly from the lower province, played their first public match on July 30 on the Washington Base-ball Park, South Brooklyn, where they had as opponents a twelve of the New York team. The weather was very favorable for the contest, and the players had a field at command which was extensive enough to afford full scope for play, but at one end it was rough, and had long grass at its boundary, in which the ball was frequently lost. The New-Yorkers appeared on the field in their customary dark-blue uniforms, while the Indepexdents were attired in white shirts and breeches, and light-blue stockings and caps. The contest began at 4.55 P. M., at which time the ball was "faced" by Messrs. Manson and Gandle, and at once the play was made in the Independents' goal-ground, where for over half an hour the brunt of the battle was borne by the light blues, who were placed upon the defensive, with two or three exceptions, nearly all through the game, a rally now and then taking the ball towards the New York goal; but, as a general thing, the New York goal-keeper had rather light duties to attend to, while the opposite goal-keeper was kept in active employment. After a struggle of thirty-five minutes' duration Flannery secured the ball back of the Independents' goal, made a clever pass to Manson, and the latter sent it squarely between the posts, giving the first game to New York, the match being best three games in five. After a temporary suspension for breathing time the contest was renewed, the Independents this time defending the easterly goal, where the field was better adapted for play. Here the Canadians played better, and once or twice the New-Yorkers were forced to act on the defensive. Finally, however, after eighteen minutes of hard fighting, during which a question of foul arose from one of the Independents' defense-fielders willfully striking an opponent on the head, Flannery again secured the ball, and, finding the Independents' goal unguarded, secured the second goal. There remained but one game to get to end the match, and this was quickly ended, for after a contest of but six minutes' duration Tucker got possession of the ball, and, doing some good running and dodging, he passed it to Flannery, who scored the third goal, thereby winning the match in three straight games. The field-captains, Messrs. Merritt and Lang, ably discharged the important duties of their positions, and some very excellent play on both sides marked the contest, the Independents showing up well in defense, and the New Yorkers in team work and strategic play. The full score is as follows:

CHAMPIONSHIP BICYCLE-RACE.

About seven thousand persons were present at the Belgrave-road Grounds, Leicester, Eng., July 14, to witness the race for the twenty-miles bicycle championship, a silver belt, and cash prizes. Up to June 9 R. Howell had won two races in succession, but at the third time of asking F. Wood beat him by scarcely a yard. The starters were: F. Wood, Leicester (holder); R. Howell, Wolverhampton, and F. Lees, Sheffield. Betting was 2 to 1 on Wood, 7 to 4 agst. Howell and 4 to 1 agst. Lees. When the pistol cracked, Lees went off with the lead at a good pace, Howell taking second position, with Wood bringing up the rear. In this order the first mile (four laps) was rubbed off in exactly 3min. An easy pace was adopted through the second mile, and, no improvement taking place in the following few circuits, Wood caused considerable amusement by calling for his coat. Matters improved somewhat in the fourth mile, but no change occurred in the position of the men, and the five miles were telegraphed in 15m. 32s. Getting well into the sixth mile, the ex-champion rushed ahead, followed by Wood, who immediately afterwards raced into premier position, amid loud cheering. During the progress of the next two laps, Wood, putting all in, looked like going away, but, easing, Howell took command again, the pace slowing considerably. The trio continued to ride in close order, Howell cutting out the pace up to the completion of the half-distance, which was recorded in 32m. 6s. Three-quarters of a mile later the Sheffielder ran into premier position, and made the running at a moderate pace up to fifteen miles. Directly afterwards, however, the Wolverhampton representative put on a brilliant spurt, and immediately took the lead. Wood and Lees both responded, and for half a lap the three rode in a cluster, amid the greatest excitement. Wood attempted to draw away, but Howell held his position. The sixteenth mile was knocked off in 3m. 1s., while 2m. 59s. accounted for the seventeenth mile, during the progress of which the leader gained no material advantage. At this stage the local man was riding with comparative ease, and the odds offered on his chance of success increased. Throughout the two following miles Howell continued to force the pace, but the three entered upon the last mile in close order. As the finish drew near the excitement increased, but no change occurred until the bell signaled the last lap, when Howell made his effort, and, quickly increasing the pace, he was soon three lengths to the good. He hit a lap from home, however, Wood raced upon even terms, and, passing his formidable opponent amid tremendous excitement, he drew rapidly away, and won, looking round, by four lengths. Lees made a splendid effort to pass Howell, and was only beaten by three-parts of a length for second prize. The last mile was completed in 2m. 49s. The crowd surrounded the winner, who experienced considerable difficulty in reaching the dressing-room. The following table shows the time for each mile and the leading man:

	Leader.				Leader.

STEELE VS. HERBERT.—The five-mile running-match between Wm. Steele and T. C. Herbert, for $250 a side, came off at the Driving Park in Elmira, N. Y., July 28. The track was in bad condition, and the betting was two to one on Steele, who assumed the lead in the first one hundred yards, was pace-maker throughout, and ultimately won in 27m. 46s. He ran the first half-mile in 2m. 33s. and the first mile in 5m. 13s. As they ran on a horse-track, of course the full distance was not covered. Our correspondent writes: "The Elmira Sunday Telegram, who was stakeholder, was notified by a backer of Herbert's not to give up the stakes, he claiming that he had a paper to show that the stakes were to be returned to the backers. When Steele's backers called for the $500 The Telegram was obliged to decline until the matter is decided."

SONS OF ST. GEORGE.

Over eight thousand people were adjudged to have been present at the annual picnic and athletic sports held by the Heart-of-Oak, Anglo Saxon and Commonwealth Lodges of the Sons of St. George at Ridgewood Park, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Monday, July 30. The weather was pleasantly cool, the entries for the various games as numerous as the prizes were worth striving for, and, had it not been for several wrangles over decisions rendered by officials who were far more capable of judging than were the malcontents, everything would have passed off quite pleasantly. The management during the earlier part of the afternoon was good enough, but later on the crowd could not be controlled, the inner ring being overrun and the officials greatly bothered in the performance of their duties. A return follows:

Half-mile run, amateur—G. Stonebridge first, in 2m. 5s.; A. P. Seary second, by two yards; W. Lyons third. H. H. Hatton, L. H. Hewitt, T. P. Donaldson, J. Dagwell and E. Mitchell also started.

One-mile walk, amateur—C. D. Lange, Pastime A. C., first, in 7m. 22s.; E. Rayens, Pastime A. C., second, in 7m. 24⅘s.; H. Starrett, Y. M. C. A., third; E. A. Kraft, Williamsburg A. C., 0; A. Peverelly, Monroe A. C., 0; F. C. Hammel, Wayne A. C., 0.

Three-legged race, 220 yards—A. P. Seary and W. Legg first, in 35s.; C. Nelms and W. Hatton, second; T. Hale and H. Cope, 0; Adams and W. Allen, 0.

C., fourth, by ten yards. The result of this race was a great surprise, and the way in which it was won showed that Lloyd was capable of making much better time than he did.

Quarter-mile run, for members over 50 years—J. Shaw first, in 1m. 7⅘s.; J. Turner second (he weighs about 300lb); J. Sweet third, falling from weakness within fifteen yards of finish when second in the race.

One-hundred-yards run—W. Legg first, in 10⅘s.; A. P. Seary, second, by a foot; T. P. Donaldson third; W. Lyons, 0; H. Faulkner, 0; G. Stonebridge, 0; L. H. Hewitt, 0; A. Bowes, 0; H. Cope, 0; J. Dagwell, 0; J. Fowkes, 0.

Hart, scratch, disqualified on the last lap. The disqualification of the two latter for unfair traveling near the finish created quite a hubbub, and threats of personal violence were made towards the judge of walking, but were not executed.

Quarter-mile run, amateur—S. Halligan first, in 58⅗s.; R. G. Barnes second, and W. L. Sandford third. Forty-five started.

FIFTY-MILE RACE.

Over a thousand people, says The San Bernardino Index of July 9, gathered at the race track on Saturday afternoon to witness the great fifty-mile race between Carl Pugh of San Bernardino and C. M. Anderson, the champion long-distance rider of California. The riders had at their disposal for the race ten horses each. Great care had been exercised in their selection, and as a result the lot was noted for both swiftness and endurance. In the pools Pugh was the favorite, selling for $10 to $7 on Anderson, and even up to the fortieth mile, where Anderson had kept ahead of Pugh from a quarter to a half mile, Pugh still remained a favorite in the pools. A little after four o'clock the riders made the start, Anderson taking the lead. Pugh undoubtedly allowed him this privilege for the purpose of saving the strength of his own horses. About the thirty-fifth mile Pugh shot ahead, but in the next heat lost his ground. In about the forty-second or forty-third mile Pugh got ahead, and up to the fiftieth gradually made the gap between the two greater, winning the race by over half a mile. Pugh's horses were almost fresh to the last, and it is a remarkable fact that the quickest heat was made by Pugh in the fiftieth mile, in exactly two minutes. Anderson's horses, which were young, were very much fatigued. The fifty miles were made in one hour fifty minutes three and a half seconds. This beats the Los Angeles record by about eight minutes. Several thousand dollars changed hands on the result. The usual number of dissatisfied losers charged the race as a fraud, but those on the judges' stand saw nothing to substantiate it.

AQUATIC.

NORTHWESTERN AMATEUR BOATING ASSOCIATION REGATTA.

MUSKEGON, Mich., July 24, 1883.

EDITOR N. Y. CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: The fifteenth annual regatta of the Northwestern Amateur Boating Association commenced to-day. On account of the numerous washouts on all the railroads centreing at this place the crowd was not so large as it otherwise would have been. The only strangers who have been able to get here were those who succeeded in boarding the steamer Menominee at Chicago and Grand Haven. The weather for the past ten days has been very cloudy and rainy, and even this morning up to 9 o'clock the same conditions prevailed. About 10 o'clock the sun came out, and a finer day for a first-class regatta could not be desired. Extensive and ample preparations had been made by the local committee. The course is on Bear Lake, a good-sized sheet of water just off from Muskegon harbor, and so situated as to be free from a "sea" and driftwood. The water at the commencement was smooth. The course was one mile and return.

Senior double-scull shells—Minnesota Boat Club, St. Paul, A. H. Schiffman, J. J. Parker (stroke), first, in 14m. 19s.; Excelsior Boat Club, Detroit, Fred D. Standish, Arthur Bevan (stroke), did not complete the course. The Minnesotas took the water first, gaining half a length, and kept the lead for about 80 rods, when the Excelsiors stopped pulling and returned to the boathouse, thus giving a walkover for the Minnesotas. The reason assigned for the Excelsiors not finishing was that Bevan was sick.

Junior single-scull shells—John Goffe, Peninsular Boat Club, Muskegon, was unopposed and rowed over the course alone in 16m. 30s.

Senior four-oared shells—Hillsdale Boat Club, Hillsdale, L. F. Beckhardt (bow), Alexander Stock, T. Havens, C. W. Terwilliger (stroke), first, in 12m. 32s.; Centennial Boat Club, Detroit, Carl Schweikart (bow), Fred A. Alder, Thomas McMahon, John Parker (stroke), second, in 12m. 33s.; Modoc Boat Club, St. Louis, H. B. Taylor (bow), O. H. Greene, H. R. Ashman, R. R. Allen (stroke), third; Minnesota Boat Club, St. Paul, W. S. Getty (bow), W. H. Lightner, W. M. Becker, George James (stroke), disqualified; Wyandotte Boat Club, Wyandotte, D. Campan (bow), F. Wolcott, R. Bigler, F. J. Hall (stroke), disqualified. This was the event of the afternoon. The Minnesotas took the water first, and seemed to steer the best course to the three-quarter-mile mark, but, failing to turn their stake, they were declared out of the race. The contest from the start seemed to be between the Centennials and Hillsdales, who kept close together to the turn, which the Centennials made first, the Hillsdales second and the Modocs third. The Wyandottes were so far behind that they were entirely out of the race. The Hillsdales and Centennials came down the course side by side, with the Centennials occasionally in the lead, but when within twenty rods of the finish the plucky Hillsdales made a spurt, dashed ahead, and won the race by about half a length. The crews all steered a fine course on the return, and when opposite the grand-stand every man did his best amid tremendous applause from the spectators. The race was close and honest, and well rowed, everyone declaring it to be one of the best they had witnessed for many a day.

Junior pair-oared shells—Peninsular Boat Club, Muskegon, Charles T. Goffe, John Goffe (stroke), first, in 15m. 3s.; Excelsior Boat Club, Detroit, Herman Dey, Arthur Bevan (stroke), did not finish, owing to the illness of Bevan.

A log-rolling contest concluded the day's sport. It was very amusing, and the contestants evinced a great deal of skill in that line. F. R. M.

SECOND DAY'S RACES.

JULY 25, 1883.

This is the second and last day of the regatta. The sun shone brightly early in the morning, and everything was excitement in anticipation of the great closing race of the regatta, the free-for-all four-oared race. At the commencement of the races a strong wind blew from the south and made the course rather rough.

Junior four-oared shells—Minnesota Boat Club, St. Paul, W. S. Getty (bow), W. H. Lightner, W. M. Becker, George James (stroke), first, in 13m. 20s.; Excelsior Boat Club, Detroit, W. R. McMillan (bow), James S. Wilson, J. R. Poor, A. F. Routhier (stroke), second, in 13m. 34½s.; Centennial Boat Club, Detroit, L. Lochbihler (bow), Chas. Robinson, Walter Johnston, W. I. Robinson (stroke), third; Wyandotte Boat Club, Wyandotte, A. J. Hull (bow), W. Welch, Edward Finn, S. J. Lawrence (stroke), fourth; Peninsular Boat Club, Muskegon, Chas. T. Goffe (bow), W. McPherson, Burt Waalkes, John Goffe (stroke), fifth. The Excelsiors took the lead after the first stroke and led to the eighth-of-a-mile stake, when the Minnesotas, pulling a stroke of about forty to forty-two to the minute, went to the front and turned first, the Excelsiors having to row a greater distance to reach their buoy in consequence of poor steering. The Peninsulars turned third. The Minnesotas kept the lead all the way back, and crossed the finish-line easily first, in 13m. 20s., the Excelsiors a hard-pushed second, Centennials third, Wyandottes fourth and Peninsulars last. The exciting part of this race was to see who should get second place.

Senior single-sculls—Henry W. Stone, Wyandotte B. C., first, in 14m. 48s.; J. E. Muchmore Jr., Pickwick Rowing Club, Chicago, second, in 15m. 2s.; William Plass, Centennial B. C., third; Charles A. Price, St. Joe B. C., Fort Wayne, Ind., fourth. Price obtained the lead at the start, with the other three close behind. At the quarter-mile mark Muchmore gained slightly. Price, who steered a good course all the way, turned first, Stone second, and Muchmore third. On the homestretch all the scullers were in a bunch and rowed wide of their true course. Stone, who took the lead at the mile-and-a-half-mark, crossed the finish a good first, in 14m. 48s.; Muchmore second, Plass third, and Price, who seemed at the turn to have the race, last. Price did not have the necessary staying qualities, as his falling off after the turn showed.

Junior double-scull shells—Minnesota B. C., A. H. Schiffman, J. J. Parker (stroke), first, in 14m. 3½s.; Peninsular B. C., Chas. T. Goffe, John Goffe (stroke), did not finish; Excelsior B. C., Herman Dey, Arthur Bevan (stroke), disqualified for failing to turn the stake. The Minnesotas took the lead at the start. The Peninsulars pulled a few strokes and then returned to the boat-house, not having a proper boat, and only starting to save their entrance-money. The Minnesotas kept the lead all the way.

Four-oared shells, open to all, a mile and a half, straight-away—Hillsdale Boat Club, Hillsdale, L. F. Beckhardt (bow), Alexander Stock, T. Havens, C. W. Terwilliger (stroke), first, in 8m. 43s.; Centennial B. C., Detroit, Carl Schweikart (bow), Thos. McMahon, Fred. A. Alder, John Parker (stroke), second, by two lengths; Minnesota B. C., St. Paul, W. S. Getty (bow), W. H. Lightner, W. M. Becker, George James (stroke), third; Modoc B. C., St. Louis, H. B. Taylor (bow), H. R. Ashman, O. H. Greene, R. R. Allen (stroke), a bad fourth. The wind by this time had partially subsided and the course become smoother. They were given a good start, with the Minnesotas, Hillsdales and Centennials pushing for first place, which the Hillsdales soon obtained, and they kept it to the finish. At half a mile the relative positions were: Hillsdales first, Centennials second, Minnesotas third, and Modocs fourth. The latter crew steered very badly, almost running into the bank. The Minnesotas also were guilty of some bad steering when near the finish. The Hillsdales came home, pulling a forty-four stroke, one open boat-length ahead of the Centennials, and rowing leisurely, while the latter were working for all there was in them. Had the winners been pressed they could have bettered their time, but the water being heavy, and they having the race anyway, they did not exert themselves to their utmost.

A log rolling contest followed. This consisted in several expert "log-riders" getting on one large log, and, by burling first one way and then the other, causing one another to lose their footing and fall into the water. The man who succeeded in keeping on the longest was declared the winner.

Oarsmen declare themselves perfectly satisfied with the rulings and their treatment, and acknowledge the supremacy of the reorganized Hillsdales, who leave for home to-morrow and get one week's practice before starting for the National regatta at Newark. F. R. M.

DRYGOODS REGATTA ASSOCIATION.—The annual regatta of this association will be held on the Harlem River Aug. 11. The races will be open to any amateur employed in the retail drygoods trade who has been employed three months prior to the date of the regatta. All races will be one-mile, straightaway, over the regular Harlem-river course. Protests must be made in writing to the secretary not later than 11 o'clock A. M. on Thursday, Aug. 9. All races will be governed by the N. A. A. O. A. The crew appearing must row over the entire course to secure the prize. A barge with music will be anchored at the finish. A valuable gold badge will be presented to each winning oarsman, and a handsome banner, commemorative of the occasion, to the houses represented by the victors in the four and six oared gig races.

THE Carleton (N. B.) Rowing Club on July 23 elected the following officers: President, Richard McWilliams; secretary and treasurer, Wm. Harding.

CAPTAIN WEBB DROWNED.

As announced in these columns last week Captain Matthew Webb, the famous long-distance swimmer, whose portrait is given herewith, on Tuesday afternoon, July 24, attempted the hazardous feat of swimming through the Whirlpool Rapids in the Niagara River, below the Falls. Nothing could dissuade him from making the perilous attempt, and, as those better acquainted than the venturesome Captain with the dangers attending such an undertaking had warned him would be the certain result, he has paid the penalty of his foolhardiness with his life. Underneath we reproduce the account of the tragic event published in The Buffalo Express:

Captain Webb and his manager, Frederick Kyle, reached Buffalo late Monday evening from Boston, and stopped at the Genesee. Tuesday morning Webb, having declared his intention of taking "a good rest before the swim," ate a hearty breakfast, enjoyed a cigar, and remained quietly at his hotel until noon, when he and Kyle went to Niagara Falls. A few days since the latter had sent out 200 circulars to the press throughout the large towns of the United States and Canada, stating that Webb and himself would be pleased to meet members of the press at the Clifton House at one o'clock on the afternoon of the 24th. At the hour named Webb and Kyle walked into the office of the hotel. There were not half a dozen press-representatives to greet him. So great had been the incredulity and distrust that even after Webb arrived hotel employes, visitors and citizens of Clifton and Niagara Falls generally refused to believe either in the genuineness of the man or his promises. The Captain had little to say at this time, but said that little pleasantly. It was two o'clock before Clifton and Niagara Falls began to wake up to the fact that as daring a feat as the world ever saw was soon to be attempted under their eyes without money and without price. Orders were sent across the river to have placards posted at once. "I'm sorry to see this," said Kyle. "We thought we'd keep it as quiet as we could to-day. If he succeeded I wanted to get a testimonial signed by correspondents and a few other responsible parties who had seen him make the swim." Capt. Webb ate no dinner. "He has more nerve on an empty stomach," said his manager. John McCloy, the veteran ferryman, who has rowed back and forth between the inclined railway and the Canadian side for years, was engaged to take the Captain in a rowboat as far down the river as could be done with safety. The plan was that the Captain should take to the water from the little boat.

It was fifteen minutes to four when Webb, Kyle and a few others stood together on the veranda of the Clifton House. The cloudy, oppressive morning had given way to a sunny afternoon. There was little bustle or stir more than usual on a bright afternoon. A few people from Buffalo and a handful of strangers at the Falls occupied the veranda, and regarded Webb, for the most part, with mute wonder. Presently he looked at his watch. "It is nearly four. I must start," said he, and he walked down the path to the foot of the cliff alone. He had removed his vest and linen shirt and his collar. His gray frock-coat was buttoned across his chest, a handkerchief was knotted about his neck, and a felt hat, well pulled down over his eyes, replaced the derby. McCloy was waiting for him with the skiff. He quickly undressed, tied a red-cotton breach-clout about his loins, and, wearing only this, stepped into the boat, and was rowed out into the stream, a short distance above the upper bridge. On the lower suspension-bridge, upon the cliffs on either side, and below, at the foot of the elevators, at the whirlpool rapids, and the whirlpool, spectators had gathered. All told, they probably did not number over 500. A freight-train pulled out from the Canada side and stood on the bridge, waiting. Old river-men, laborers, everybody had but one comment: "If he goes in he never will get out alive." McCloy dropped down stream with his passenger to within a few yards of a point abreast the old Maid of the Mist landing. "I talked to him some coming down the river," said McCloy. "I asked him if he had a family, and how much money he had made. 'I got $25,000,' said he. 'Have you got any left?' said I. 'Well, I guess $15,000 of it is gone,' said he. 'Well,' said I, 'if I was you I'd go ashore and keep the rest.' He didn't say anything nor ask any questions. I went as far as I dared, and told him so. Then he stood up in the boat, and in a minute he was gone, and I pulled in to the landing."

THE START.

The people on the bridge and the cliffs close by saw the dive—a clean, graceful plunge. He came to the surface in a second, squarely in the middle of the stream. With slow, sweeping strokes, swimming straight ahead, he was borne down and under the bridge. For the first few hundred feet below the bridge the water shoots ahead like an arrow in the middle of the stream, while its retardation at the sides throws the surface into long waves, pointing ahead from each side, and gradually increasing into billows that break many feet high. Down this last little stretch of seemingly smooth green water Webb was clearly seen to shoot. The strokes of arms and legs could be discerned through the clear green waves as through glass. It was two minutes after four o'clock when he entered the river from the boat. At fifteen minutes past four he entered the first huge wave of the rapid—entered it with a straight-ahead stroke—and this was the last that most of the spectators saw of him. Those further down the river, however, saw him pass through the first heavy water and ride forward lightly to the next foamy crest. For a hundred yards or more through this water glimpses were had of him. For three-quarters of a mile below the suspension bridge in a moderate curve runs the whirlpool rapid, the wildest, most tumultuous and dangerous portion of Niagara River. Owing to the abruptness of the declivity and the narrowness of the channel, the water is forced into a broken ridge in the middle of the stream, and its fierce turbulence, its terrific commotion as seen from the water's edge, are beyond description. At the foot of this rapid lies the whirlpool.

The name whirlpool is not quite accurate, since the body of water to which it is applied is rather a large eddy in which small whirlpools are constantly forming and breaking. The spectator cannot realize their tremendous power unless there is some object floating upon the surface by which it may be demonstrated. Logs from broken rafts are frequently carried over the falls, and when they reach this eddy tree-trunks from two to three feet in diameter and fifty feet long, after a few preliminary and stately gyrations, are drawn down endwise, submerged for a while, and then ejected with great force to resume again their devious course. Often they will be kept in this monotonous round for several weeks before escaping from their watery prison. The cleft in the bedrock which forms the debouche of the basin is only 400 feet wide. Standing beside it at the water's edge, and considering that the whole volume of the water in the river is rushing through it with a current whose unbroken surface indicates its immense depth, the spectator witnesses a manifestation of physical force which makes a stronger impression on his mind than even the great fall itself. And it was through this foaming rift, into the great pocket of mighty currents and mysterious forces that Webb was carried. Four minutes after he entered the first wild rapids, about three hundred yards below the bridge, he was seen by a small party of spectators who stood on the landing at the whirlpool rapids. Dead or alive none could say. He was nearly erect in the water, and was being whirled about. Then, as in a flash, the rushing mountain of foam and roar closed over him. One said "he dove;" another, "he was drawn down." Who knows?

The rest of the tale is at best a sorry one. The few watchers at the Whirlpool and on precarious points below strained their eyes and saw the swimmer's head in every eddy, every bit of drift or whirling foam. One gentleman felt sure he saw something "that might have been Webb" carried out of the Whirlpool on the lower Canadian side and whirled off down the river. Down the river meant another stretch of five miles of sucking currents and thundering waves whose power no one knew. Even if, after the gyrations and deep submergence of the Whirlpool, the exhausted and beaten swimmer had been hurled out into the lower rapid, what chance was there then? A long strip of rapids, gradually smoothing themselves out into a placid-looking river, but really a hazardous succession of cauldrons and whirlpools—this lay before him ere the harbor at Lewiston could be gained, seven miles below. The swim, if a powerless man in the awful clutch of that river can be said to swim, was about a mile and a half. He was last seen seventeen minutes after he entered the river.

A FRUITLESS SEARCH.

It was a solemn and heavy-hearted group that hurriedly ordered carriages at the Whirlpool grounds between 5 and 6 o'clock. Kyle, the ferryman who had brought down Webb's clothes, a boy with blankets and brandy who had searched the shore of the Whirlpool, The Express representative and one or two others decided to make such search as was possible for the lost man. It was after 6 when the search-party rattled down the hill and drew up at the old stone tavern under Queenstown Heights. A brief parley secured for Kyle and a comrade a staunch ferryboat, with two fishermen at the oars. The remaining members of the party deployed up the shore of the river under the Queenstown cliffs. The boat was laboriously pulled up against the stiff current, its occupants scanning shore and tide. The precarious footpath that runs under the cliffs ends about a mile up stream in a wild tangle of vines and bushes which overgrow the great boulders about which the river hisses and threatens. This is the shore which poor Webb must have made, if he made any. The searchers toiled along, hazarding life and limb in the vain effort to get far enough up stream to scan the banks up to the Whirpool. After an hour's toil the effort had to be given over. Further progress, either by boat or shore, was impossible. Returning as they had come, all hands took the rather overburdened boat, and were whirled and swirled down stream to the Queenstown landing. Just above the ruined suspension bridge two Indians were drowned on Monday. A few days ago a boat was upset in the river at this place. With such gruesome bits of news the saddened party were regaled as they were borne down stream. Arrived at Queenstown-landing, a silent drive was made through the gathering darkness to Clifton. Mr. Kyle took charge of Captain Webb's effects, and came to Buffalo on a late train.

FINDING OF THE BODY.

The fate of the brave Captain was settled beyond question by the finding of his lifeless body floating in the river near Lewiston, four miles below the head of the rapids, at half-past ten o'clock A. M. July 28. A correspondent of the N. Y. Times gives the following particulars:

"I left Buffalo for the falls at six o'clock this morning, determined thoroughly to look over the ground where the gallant swimmer was supposed to have lost his life. Capt. Webb's manager left for the East on Wednesday night. He left behind no inducements for the recovery of the body, and altogether acted in such a way as to lead the majority of people to believe that it was not Capt. Webb who attempted to swim the rapids. The statements of trustworthy newspaper reporters were not believed. There was questioning and doubting, and, as a matter of course, some betting. Odds of three to two were even offered that Webb never entered the water at all. Nothing but the recovery and identification of the body of Capt. Webb would convince these doubters that he had attempted to swim the rapids at all. On arriving at the Falls I went to the point where Webb leaped into the water, McCloy, who rowed him down, acting as guide, with an assistant. The shores on both sides were carefully examined. The water along these rapids rises about twenty feet higher in the centre of the river than along the banks. When the whirlpool had been reached and carefully scanned, the searchers on the Canadian side crossed over to the American shore. Scarcely had the two come together when a dispatch was received stating that two bodies had been found at Lewiston, five miles below. A hurried visit to Lewiston determined the bodies to be those of two Indians drowned just below the rapids on Monday. A coroner was summoned, and the bodies were removed from the water while a jury was being impaneled. This had scarcely been accomplished when Richard W. Turner, a mason, of Youngstown, rowed to the wharf and announced the discovery of another body, which he had tied to a wharf a mile and a half below on the American side. A laborer named Robbins was detailed to assist Turner in bringing up the body. An hour more elapsed before the two men came back. To the stern of their skiff was attached a human body. It was taken into a boathouse, and a curious crowd soon collected. To those who knew Capt. Webb in life the body was at once identified, although it was face downward. The arms were extended, as though in the act of taking a swimming stroke, and the feet were likewise extended, as though in the act of swimming. In this position the body was found. The flesh was bloated to double the usual size, but none of the features were disfigured. Covering the body was a white deposit, perhaps half an inch thick.

"'It is not Webb,' said a prominent gentleman of Lewiston.

"'How do you know?' was asked.

"'Because he had a blue anchor tattooed on the right arm, and I defy anyone to find it.'

"Without trouble a man was found who entered the water and lifted the right arm. With a rough scrape the white coating peeled away, and there in the bloated flesh was the blue anchor. The people of Lewiston were convinced, and so the curious crowd scattered. Your correspondent secured a careful examination of the body. The coroner at this time was busily engaged in summoning a jury, which he did not succeed in filling until 6 o'clock. On the right thigh of the body was found a deep flesh-wound. Above the small of the back on the left side was another flesh-wound. The bloated body was at length turned face upward. It presented a terrible appearance. Over the left temple was a deep cut, which was only a flesh-wound, however. In the absence of any physicians the body was pulled half-way into a skiff. Then it was found that directly in the top of the head was a gash about three inches long, penetrating to the brain. This would seem to have been the cause of death. The body of the great swimmer lay in the boathouse, guarded by a half-drunken sailor, until 6 o'clock, when a jury was impaneled and the body was removed to an undertaking-room. The inquest will begin on Monday, but is not likely to develop any facts not heretofore reported. The breech-clout was still about Webb's loins when the body was discovered. In turning over the body, however, this was torn off in the presence of your correspondent. Frederick Kyle, manager of the lost athlete, on reaching Boston telegraphed to The Niagara Falls Gazette that a reward of $100 was offered for the recovery of the body. This telegram was delayed, and did not reach the Falls until yesterday. This tardy work on the part of Kyle is severely censured. As soon as the body was identified he was telegraphed to. About ten or twelve physicians from Lockport, Niagara Falls and Suspension Bridge were at Lewiston as soon as steam would bring them, all bent on making a post-mortem examination. They urge that a thorough examination is of the greatest importance to determine whether the Captain had the life crushed out of him by the weight of the water, whether he was drowned, or whether he lost his life by diving and striking on a jagged stone, inflicting the wound on his head. It is generally conceded that the force of the waters crushed out his life, though doctors upholding other theories are found in plenty."

SKETCH OF THE DECEASED.

Captain Webb was a native of Shropshire, Eng., and was about thirty-five years of age at the time of his death. His height was 5 feet 8¼ inches, and his customary weight was about 180. In early life and for several years after reaching man's estate he followed the sea, gradually rising from the position of an able-bodied common seaman to master of a ship. His name first became known to the general public in the Spring of 1872, when he leaped from the steamer Russia, on a voyage from this port to Liverpool, to save a seaman named Wood, who had fallen overboard. His gallant effort was not successful, the unfortunate man being drawn under the vessel and killed by the propeller. The Captain was in the water nearly three-quarters of an hour, but showed no signs of exhaustion when taken on board. For this act the passengers presented him with a handsome purse, and he was honored with the Royal Humane Society's first gold medal, the Duke of Edinburgh making the presentation speech, and with a silver medal by the Liverpool Life-saving Society. Three years later the Captain, having quit the merchant service, was brought conspicuously before the public by a successful attempt, made July 3, 1875, to swim in the River Thames, from Brunswick Pier, Blackwall, to the Town Pier, Gravesend, nearly twenty miles. The attempt was made in pursuance of a wager of $100 laid by J. Baylis against $50 staked by himself, and without receiving assistance of any kind he accomplished the feat in 4h. 52m. 44s. His success in this essay and the little fatigue he experienced from it induced him to attempt to excel the unexampled achievement of Capt. Paul Boyton, who on May 29, same year, encased in his life-saving suit, effected the passage of the boisterous English Channel from Cape Grisnez, France, to Folkestone, Eng. Webb proposed to surpass this by swimming across the channel without other covering for the body than a good coating of porpoise-oil, as a preventative against the possibly ill-effects of prolonged immersion in cold sea-water. People were disposed to laugh when the announcement of this intention was made public, but the courageous Captain went resolutely forward with his physical preparations for the undertaking. During his preparatory training he, on July 20 of said year, essayed to swim about twenty miles in the sea, from the Admiralty Pier at Dover to the Ramsgate Harbor quay. Swimming without artificial appliance, he accomplished the task in 8h. 45m., although it rained steadily. He made the attempt to cross the channel Aug. 12, but unfortunately the sea was so rough that he was compelled to abandon the undertaking after he had been in the water 6h. and 49m., and covered more than half the distance. Undaunted by his failure, he reattempted the task Aug. 24, 25, following, and this time was successful, he effecting the passage from Dover to Calais, without receiving any aid whatsoever, in 21h. 45m., having swum in all about thirty-five miles. By way of attesting their appreciation of the skill, strength, pluck and astonishing powers of endurance displayed by the Captain, his countrymen made up a good-sized purse as a reward for his successful effort to eclipse the performance of Boyton. Being a fairly good speaker, the Captain made considerable money by going about lecturing upon the art of swimming, and a treatise on the subject in book-form was published by him; but for two years subsequently he did not give any noteworthy exhibition of his powers, although his example and teachings did much to popularize the art of swimming. On Sept. 10, 11, 1877, he created a sensation by twice crossing the channel seated on a floating canvas mattress, with sail and paddle and a bottle of water for company. In the Spring of 1878 he made a proposition to swim for thirty-six hours without cessation, provided someone would give odds of $10,000 against $2,500 but, as no one cared to close with the offer, he determined to make the attempt anyhow. As a preliminary to the undertaking he on July 3 swam for ten hours in the Thames, between Gravesend and Woolwich, no feeling of distress resulting. He commenced the more severe strain on his powers Aug. 2, taking the water in front of North Woolwich Gardens, his idea being to swim with the tide as much as possible. The water became so rough and the wind so high, however, that he was compelled to abandon the undertaking after he had been immersed 9h. 6m. We next heard of Webb in the Spring of 1879, when he was the successful competitor in a swimming-race of eighty-four hours' duration (fourteen hours daily) at the Lambeth Baths, London, May 19 to 24. He swam a distance of 74 miles; George Fearn second, 62 miles 18 lengths of bath; Wm. Beckwith third, 42 miles 6 lengths. Shortly after this he made arrangements to visit this country professionally, and arrived at this port July 22, same year. Paul Boyton having, it was stated, paddled in his life-saving dress from Long Branch, N. J., to Manhattan Beach, Coney Island, the Captain set about eclipsing that performance, and, having made financial arrangements with the proprietor of the Manhattan Beach Hotel, he on Aug. 13 undertook to swim without assistance from Sandy Hook to the beach in front of the hotel. This he easily accomplished, taking the water at 8 38 A. M. and reaching his destination shortly after 2 P. M., the distance in a direct line being about ten miles. He did not land till past five o'clock, according to contract, filling in the extra time by buffeting the heavy waves a mile or so from shore. Webb and Boyton subsequently entered into an agreement to engage in a match contest, the former to swim twenty miles and the latter to paddle twenty-five, for an announced stake of $1,000. J. G. Bennett gave a purse of $1,000, and the race took place at Newport, R. I., Aug. 22 following. After swimming less than ten miles and a quarter Webb was seized with cramps and retired, leaving Boyton to finish alone. They were afterwards engaged to perform at Nantasket Beach, Mass., Boyton to paddle twelve miles and a half while Webb swam ten miles. The affair was badly managed and ended unsatisfactorily, the referee declaring it "no race" and ordering them to swim again Sept. 16, which they did not do. On Sept. 14 Webb was a participant in a swimming tournament in Gravesend Bay, opposite Bath, L. I., the conditions of which were that the contestant covering the greater distance in the shortest time should be the winner. E. Von Schoening was first, George Werhan second, M. Webb third, William Daily fourth and G. Wade fifth. The affair was a failure financially, and there was no certainty as to the distance swum by the winner. Not long afterwards Webb returned to England, where he on March 10, 1880, completed the task of keeping afloat for sixty consecutive hours without assistance at the Westminster Aquarium, London. This performance he repeated June 29 to July 1 in a tank at Scarborough, and in August of the same year he swam for seventy-four hours, including four minutes' rest, at the latter place. June 20 to 25, 1881, he and Willie Beckwith swam a match of sixty hours (ten hours daily), for $1,000, at the Westminster Aquarium, Beckwith winning. Oct. 1 following he defeated G. A. Jennings in a five hour match, at Rochdale, Eng., Webb swimming 5 miles 660 yards and Jennings 3 miles 1,540 yards. In the Spring of 1882 Webb paid his second professional visit to the States, and on July 1 he engaged in a race, less than two miles, turn, with George Wade at Coney Island, the Captain winning by fifty feet, in 1h. 7m. Subsequently Webb was engaged to give natatorial exhibitions at Nantasket Beach, Mass., where on Aug. 14 he defeated a field of twenty-two in a race of less than five miles, his opponents being allowed a start of from 2m. to 10m. 30s. On the 23d of the same month he swam a race with Thos. Riley at Hull, Mass., the stated distance being two miles, and Webb winning in 1h. 4m. 50s. Oct. 9 to 14 following he was stated to have remained immersed in a tank of water without assistance 128h. 15m. (allowed fifteen minutes' rest every twenty-four hours), at Horticultural Hall, Boston, Mass. The feat was not authenticated, however. He soon afterwards returned to England, where in February last he was defeated by W. Beckwith in a six days' match, for $1,000, at the Westminster Aquarium. On April 30 he again suffered defeat at the hands of Beckwith in a twenty-mile match, for $1,000, contested at the Lambeth Baths. Having concluded that America afforded a better field wherein to turn to account his special talents, Webb again crossed the ocean, arriving at Boston during the week ending June 3, bringing with him several novel inventions which he intended using in giving exhibitions throughout the country. After deciding to make the attempt to effect the passage of the rapids, he took up his quarters at Nantasket Beach, where during the week closing July 21 he repeatedly dove from a floating tower about sixty-five feet high and swam the dangerous Hull-gut. Deceased leaves a young wife and two children—a little girl about two years old and a boy about eight months old—who were residing at Nantasket, Mass., when the news of their sad bereavement was received. We understand that he had two brothers living in Manitoba.

KNICKERBOCKER YACHT CLUB.

The second pennant-regatta of this club the present season was sailed on Wednesday, July 25. The weather was as good as anyone could ask for, while there was a good breeze from southeast to make the yachtsmen happy. The course for boats of the first-class was from a stakeboat off the club-house at Port Morris to Tom buoy off City Island and return; that for all other classes was from the same starting-point to the Fort Schuyler buoy and back. There was a strong ebb-tide, and it was slow work through the Brothers Islands. The Nettie Thorp and Lillie B., after a while got tired and returned to their anchorage only to see it breeze up, to the great disgust of their skippers. The Musidora was the first to turn Fort Schuyler buoy, and she was closely followed by the Lizzie R. Returning, the Lizzie R. slipped to the front, and led the fleet to the finish, arriving at 6.39:34. The Musidora followed at 6.44:48. The Vaddie and Mary E. Coutant were next to arrive. The start, finish, elapsed and corrected times are as follow:

OPEN SCULLERS' RACE.—A three-mile single-scull race, open to all, will take place at Lake Washaucum, Sterling, Mass., Aug. 17, at 5 P. M., for which a purse of $700, divided into $400, $200 and $100, will be given. The lake is near Worcester and Fitchburg, there being only twenty minutes distance between both places. The entries thus far are said to be Hanlan, Ross, Hosmer, Lee, Courtney, Plaisted, Elliott and Ten Eyck. Entries are free, and can be made to S. A. Webber, Fitchburg, Mass.

HANLAN, HOSMER AND LEE rowed in the presence of several thousand people at Fulton, N. Y., July 26. The course was said to be a mile and a half in length, and was rowed over twice. Hanlan finished first, winning without great exertion in 21m. 30s.; Hosmer second, 21m. 35s.; and Lee third, 21m. 37s.

F. E. PETERS was the winner of the third race of the series for a silver cup at Waltham, Mass., rowed July 26. The distance was one mile, and Peters won in 9m. 10s., with Thomas Cotter second by 10s. Charles Davis and Charles Sheffield also started.

FASTEST AMATEUR SWIMMING RECORD.

The third contest for the silver trophy presented by the proprietors of The Sporting Life, and typical of the amateur half-mile swimming championship, took place July 14 at the Welsh Harp, Hendon, London, Eng. On rising to the surface W. Henry led, G. Dunmore being second, A. B. France third, and D. Ainsworth fourth. After swimming eighty yards France drew up to the leader, and finishing the first hundred Ainsworth took premier position, with Dunmore second, France and Henry being almost level, and Danels a good fifth. At this juncture Dunmore got unpleasantly close to Ainsworth's heels, but soon shifted his position, and commenced swimming in good form. When 400 yards had been covered the race was virtually over, as Ainsworth turned on his right side and calmly surveyed his position. At this juncture France was moving in grand style and rapidly overhauling Dunmore, while Henry was falling to the rear, and at the conclusion of 500 yards Ainsworth led by twenty yards (time, 8m. 4⅘s.) from France, who, with Dunmore, had been pluckily contesting the issue for second place, the last-named being a yard behind, Henry eight yards in rear of Dunmore. Commencing the next portion of the journey, the chief feature was the swimming of Ainsworth and France, as Dunmore, after covering another 150 yards, stopped through what is commonly called a stitch, but soon recommenced. At this stage an interesting struggle was taking place between Danels and Booth, who swam to the finish, separated by but a few yards. Meanwhile, Ainsworth was making the best of his way home, followed by France, and both throughout swam in magnificent form, Ainsworth finally winning by seventeen seconds, in 14m. 23⅘s., which is the fastest amateur time on record for the distance. France was second, in 14m. 40⅘s.; Henry third, Dunmore fourth, Danels fifth, and Booth sixth. This being Ainsworth's third successive victory, the trophy became his personal property. R. Watson was referee and timekeeper.

REGATTA AT FALL RIVER.—The management of Forest-hill Gardens, Fall River, Mass., will hold a regatta on Saturday, Aug. 18, open to all oarsmen, the events being as follow: Professional single-sculls, three miles, turn, for $500, $225 and $125. Many of the prominent oarsmen, including Hanlan, have already entered. The race is to be governed by the laws of the N. A. A. O. Consolation-race, $75, $50 and $25. Amateur single-sculls, open to all amateurs eligible to row under the laws of the N. A. A. O.; prize, gold watch, value $100. Amateur single-sculls, open to Fall River amateurs only; prize, silver ice-pitcher, value $50; substitutes not allowed. No entrance-fees required, and all entries close Wednesday night, Aug. 15, at 12 o'clock. The course is an excellent one, and several grand-stands will be erected. For further information address J. R. Francis, manager, or Chas. Burnham, amusement-director.

THE DORCESTER (MASS.) YACHT CLUB on July 26 held a catrig regatta for cups offered by Coolidge Barnard. In the first-class the Queen Mab, W. L. Phinney owner, won the first race, and in the second-class the Nora, G. B. Dennie, owner, won, by allowance, against the Corsair, L. M. Clark owner. During the progress of the race a sweepstake mosquito-race for boats less than 14 feet long was sailed, and was won by the Waif, Captain Nute.

PROFESSIONAL REGATTA.—The management of the Point of Pines, Mass., appreciating the successful boat-races held last season at their resort, will hold a scullers' race on Aug. 10, for which a purse of $500 is offered, divided into prizes of $250, $150 and $100. On Aug. 11 a four-oared working-boat race will take place, for prizes of $100, $75 and $50. Entries can be made to Charles H. Mayer, Parker House, Boston.

SULLIVAN VS. WHITE.—On Sunday, July 15, John Sullivan and Louis White of the Pioneer Boat Club engaged in a race for fun over the Long Bridge two-mile course at San Francisco, Cal. Sullivan, who rowed in the boat built in the East for P. J. McInerney, and had the advantage over his antagonist in that respect, led from end to end, winning by a length, in 17m. The water was rough.

THE ENTERPRISE and North-end second crews of Boston, Mass., will row a four-mile race in working-boats on the North River Aug. 10, for $100 a side.

To Correspondents.

I. D. J. S., City.—Thank you for the original contribution; also for Mr. Bird's elaborate article in London Times.

H. D. LYMAN.—We should hardly like to name a price, and could not ask you to break a set.

E. E. BURLINGAME.—We make a proposition that perhaps may prove feasible and agreeable.

W. W. MORGAN, London.—Have posted a letter containing suggestions we hope may prove practicable.

OUR CORRESPONDENT H. D. Lyman, P. O. Box 702, Washington, D. C., has a large lot of chess-slips to dispose of.

The Chess-player's Chronicle, after several months of suspension, is again rehabilitated in all its old excellence, and is one of the most welcome visitors to our table—as always. Its address is changed to 556 Caledonian Road, London, N., England.

STEINITZ VS. ZUKERTORT.—The following paragraph in the July Chess Monthly is too pithy and amusing to let pass: "Mr. Steinitz has authorized Mr. Steel to communicate with Mr. Minchin with reference to a match which he seems willing to play with Mr. Zukertort. The conditions are £300 a side, or more if agreeable; the match to consist of eight or ten games; three or four games to be played a week; £50 to be deposited as forfeit money, and play to commence between October and January. Mr. Zukertort has authorized Mr. Minchin to reply to Mr. Steel that he cannot make arrangements for a match at such a remote future."

GERMAN CHESS ASSOCIATION.

Third Congress at Nuremburg.

The historic walls of this old Bavarian city now echo to the clang of a different sort of arms from those with which they have ever and anon resounded for wellnigh a thousand years. This congress, extended to an international event, was called to order and organized on Sunday, July 13, in the Congress Hall of the Museum. This is really a gathering of first-rate importance, and is growing into more imposing proportions with each annual event. This time it appears somewhat less than its real merit, from standing, as it were, in the shadow of that greatest of all chess events, the just past London International.

With a number of young and rising men we heartily welcome the reappearance of several renowned veteran princes of the chessboard, notably Herren L. Paulsen, L. Schallopp, J. Minckwitz and Dr. Max Lange, who will meet the more recently practiced Bird, Mason and Blackburne. We wish MM. Chasmier, Clerc and De Riviere could have seen their way to enter. If asked the one point of especial interest to us we should say: the prospective meeting of the oft-tested giant Herr Louis Paulsen, with his armor of proof and ponderous weapons which few have been able to penetrate or withstand, with the glittering lance, fiery courage and tireless energy of the young Baron von Bardeleben. If Paulsen goes down now his sun has passed the meridian; if he wins first or second prize he still towers in the very front ranks of the world's greatest. That it is a one-game tourney, with a pretty fast time-limit, is a decided handicap to this great master in his unpracticed condition. If Bardeleben wins he at once becomes magister inter magistros. Mr. Blackburne never misses a tourney, and of course aims at the first prize. Mason may sustain his best form through one round, a draw at once counting half, though he was a gainer by the new London rule.

The list of entries is a very formidable one, with an admirable admixture of veteran sturdiness and youthful impetuosity. It stands, as now reported: Prof. Berger, Bird, Blackburne, Fritz, Gunaberg, Hruby, Dr. Max Lange, Mason, Minckwitz, L. Paulsen, Schallopp, Schottlœnder, Dr. Schmidt, J. Schwarts and Wittek.

The leading arrangements are—each entry, one game with each competitor; drawn games on their first occurrence count half to each player; three games on two consecutive days; time-limit, twenty moves per hour; ties to be played off by one game, but should that be drawn the prizes at issue to be pooled and equally divided; the prizes offered are (sterling) £80, £40, £25 £15 and £10. Besides these prizes, especial inducements to exertion are presented, notably a gorgeous drinking-horn, constructed expressly for this occasion, and to go with the first prize. There appears to be no end of social jollity and good times planned out—excursions, banquets, sight-seeing, etc.; with a "blindfold" match of twelve games by the young Alex. Fritz of Darmstadt; thirty simultaneous games over the board by Herr J. Minckwitz, the accomplished editor of The Schachzeitung. If Mr. Mason gets through all this whole, he will astonish his friends more than he would to win the first prize and the horn of Gambrinus.

CONGRESS BOOK.—The Book of the late London Tourney is to be laid before the chess world at the earliest practicable moment. The editorial charge has been entrusted to the competent J. Innes, Minchin; the printing and publishing to Jas. Wade, 18 Tavistock street, Covent Garden, London, W. C. It is a gratifying change from the usual course of such things that each of the English prize-winners is to annotate his own games. This is in accordance with a principle we have often advocated.

18..K Kt-B 5	P-K Kt 3(e)	39..Q B-Kt 5	Q B × Kt
19..K B × Kt	B P × B(f)	40..B P × B	Q R × P
20..Kt-Kt 7 +	K-Q sq(g)	41..P-K R 4	P-K R 3
21..Kt × K P +	K-his 2	42..Q B-Q 8	P-Q B 4, and Zukertort resigns.

(a) Authorities are still divided as to this or Kt to K 2.

(b) To advance Kt P and close the diagonal of Q B; but Black has no time to waste a move in such a dangerous position. We prefer 11 Castles.

(c) A deviation from the usual Q Kt to his 5—and seems preferable.

(d) Has only a deceptive security. There is a more satisfactory continuation, e. g.:

12..	P to Q Kt 4, now if	13..Q to R 3 +	K to Q sq
13..Q Kt × Kt,	Q Kt × Kt	16..Q × K B	Kt P × B
14..Q B × Kt	K × Q B	17..Q × R P	Q-her Kt 3, etc.

(e) As castling is equally dangerous, this is forced, for Black cannot afford to leave this Kt unmolested.

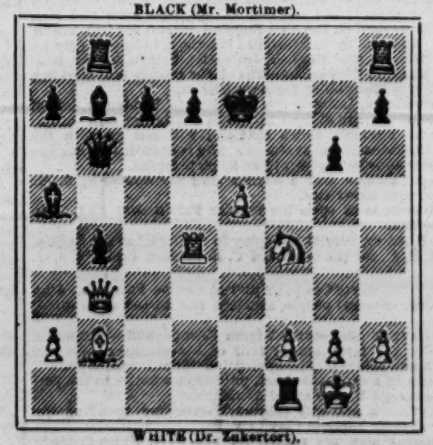
(f) 19..Q P × B is equally unsatisfactory.

(g) The only move; any other, and White would sacrifice his Kt with a mating position.

(h) 22..Kt to his 5 is more threatening.

(i) [When Zukertort makes a blunder he makes a stupendous one—one there is no mistaking, and from which there is no escape. We must say with quaint old Peter Pratt: "He does this because any other move would be prejudical to the adversary." Look here:]

BLACK (Mr. Mortimer).



WHITE (Dr. Zukertort).

White has only the embarrassment of choice. 25..K R to Q sq or Q to K R 3 wins in every variation—and they are many and easy.

(k) An excellent move, which caused White a deal of trouble. His next move, also, is an elegant one—in fact, Mr. Mortimer conducted the latter part of the game with noteworthy correctness.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

J. A. S.—As answered to these initials in our issue of July 21 last, as promised (although its insertion in a different department may have caused you to overlook it), the only person named Hill in the firm of Willoughby, Hill & Co., Chicago, is David K. Hill. J. M. Hill has no connection either with that firm or with the oyster-house in the basement of the building occupied by that firm. This information comes from D. K. Hill.

FLORIDA.—1. Frank Rivers' Melodeon, formerly the City Museum, Philadelphia, was opened March 1, 1860. 2. The performers were Miss H. O. Lalande, Miss Ella Wood, the Misses Mary and Kate Partington, Miss Millie Flora, the Misses Jennie and Julia Cristine, Dan Gardner, A. J. Leavitt, the Conrad Brothers, and a dancer who took the name of Mlle. Ella Zoyara Boyzenarius.

VANITY.—We have no time or space for a consideration of such questions further than to tender you the consolation, assuming that you are in earnest, that there is no human being so homely that somebody will not be found to think him handsome.

H. L., Dime Museum, St. Louis.—The original Jenny Lind is living.

F. H.—1. The Aztecs did not appear at Barnum's Museum, this city, in June, or July or August, 1860. Furthermore, we have examined our files additionally, and find that they did not appear there at any time that year up to the close of October. 2. If they were tendered a reception by President Buchanan just before he retired from the Presidential chair, it was probably in January or February, 1861, and not 1860, as you think. 3. If it is of any satisfaction to you, we have made a further search, and find that they reappeared in this country, after a long absence in Europe, early in November, 1860, at Barnum's Museum, this city. They had sailed from Liverpool about the middle of October with the intention of opening at Barnum's on Oct. 29.

TEDDY, Fall River.—1. We cannot just now say that we have ever heard of a man by that name performing that feat. Several persons have walked a tight-rope over Niagara River. 2 and 3. See answers on another page. 4. Whatever he shall play will be reported in our regular amusement pages as soon as he plays it. We have no space to spare here to make known the intentions of performers, which are constantly changing.

SUBSCRIBER, Charleston.—Miss Mary Anderson has decided not to make her London debut in "Pygmalion and Galatea." She will make it as Parthenia to the Ingomar of J. H. Barnes, whom Adelaide Neilson first brought to this country, and who came here again, two seasons ago to play Captain Crosstree in the new "Black-eyed Susan," called "William and Susan."

M. K., Binghamton.—In this column we do not furnish the whereabouts of performers who are in this country. Address them through THE CLIPPER Post-office, and in that way ascertain their whereabouts.

C. F. M., Cincinnati.—The only Gillan we have ever heard of as being an actor was J. C. Gillan, better known as J. M. Cooke; but he died four or five years ago in England, to which country he returned from here.

W. B. W., Shamokin.—Please excuse us. Dwarfs have alleged ages and heights and weights. You name so many that it would take us the remainder of our life to find out their real heights, weights and ages.

OPERA HOUSE, Wilmington.—We cannot undertake to pass upon the reliability of managers, any more than we would be justified in publicly expressing our opinion here as to the merits of any performer trying to get an engagement.

H. F., Buffalo.—The original Blondin was never in England prior to 1861. Before he got there, there were several imitation Blondins in that country, however; and it is this that has deceived you.

R. AND D., Jersey City Heights.—About thirty dollars a week at the start, if managers have the same opinion of your ability that you yourselves have.

G. AND K., North Topeka.—Bygoing into court and arguing for an injunction. You would have to consult a lawyer ultimately, and might better do so at the outset.

THEATRE.—You had better write the parties named as to their relationship. But on such a subject don't again send out a postal-card to anyone.

H. W. H., Brooklyn.—Charlotte Crampton played in "Mazeppa" at the National Theatre, this city, before Adah Isaacs Menken was seen here in it.

E. S. D., Newark.—"By the Mountain-side," the German dialect song sung by Miss Maud Leigh, was written and composed for this paper by Charles M. Connolly.

BROTHER, Washington.—James A. Bland is still in England, and may be with Sam Hague's company in Liverpool yet. We have not at hand a list of Hague's present troupe.

A. G.—John Pendy, manager of Monroe's Theatre, Chicago, thus answers your question: "The advance agent for Billy Pastor was Harry Miner, and the property-man was Dave Oaks."

W. F. S., Little Rock.—There may be a colored contortionist traveling. We cannot now recollect that we have ever seen one.

E. J. P., Boston.—Nelse Seymour died on Feb. 2, 1875, and Dan Bryant the following April 10.

O. W. L., Gloucester.—We do not advertise printed music or newspapers, and our custom is to advertise letters once only.

ADVERTISER.—Such a card, with the address added, would cost 60 cents for each insertion.

SUBSCRIBER, Baltimore.—You can address Samuel Colville at the Lyceum Theatre, this city, which he is to manage next season.

L. D. R., Pittsburg.—It is not the same Mrs. Frank Mordaunt

INTRODUCTORY.

TUESDAY, July 31.

Everywhere are heard notes of preparation for the amusement campaign of 1883-4. Here in the metropolis managers should be wary, and not contemplate too large profits as a result of an early opening of their houses. The Summer in this vicinity has so far been a most remarkable one. For coolness it has seldom been equaled within the memory of the present race of playgoers. There have really not been more than seven or eight hot days altogether, and four or five of these came along one after another during the first week in July. It may be said that we have had no Summer here, if hot weather constitutes it. As the chap who was first to strike earth remarked of him who had been his companion in a collapsed balloon, and whose arrival was momentarily expected, "It has got to come;" and it is now almost as likely to come in September as early in August. The opening of our public schools has this season been deferred far beyond the usual time, and perhaps this is the reason that the hot weather is holding off—so that the teachers can enjoy it as usual when they get back to work. Then there is Coney Island to be served. Scarcely anybody down there has made any money yet, and Old Sol has never been known to permit a Coney Island publican to go through an entire season without some profit. Finally, the excursion steamers must have a chance Thus far, the Fishing Banks boat, the venerable J. B. Schuyler, is about the only craft that financially, if not piscatorially, has "cast its lines in pleasant places." Therefore, while probably managers are justified in the hope of having a busy season until the Presidential canvass of 1884, already started in the partisan newspapers, begins to be fairly or unfairly taken hold of by the wire-pullers and their "heelers," they will exhibit prudence by not expecting too much too early in the amusement season. Then, should the Summer continue cool, managers can enjoy the possibly resultant good business all the more as being pure "fat." ..... This word brings us to Sarah Bernhardt. She is no longer the lean and hungry thing of whose picture and that of her pet canine a distinguished French literary gentleman once said that it reminded him of a healthy dog to whom a bone had been thrown. She is beginning to round off her old angles by taking on fat..... Long Beach and the society of W. J. Florence are enough to make a sick man dismiss his physician and cancel his contract with the undertaker; and John McCullough, who has for the past few days been enjoying both Long Beach and the companionship of Florence, is reported as having made a very perceptible advance towards a return to complete health. There is much virtue in Long Island's sea-girt shore, even when the bone-boiling vats of Barren Island are not very far off; and the amount of virtue in Florence has always been simply incomputable. .....Mrs. Langtry has left the Oriental Hotel, has left Long Branch and her palace-car, and has also left the country; but she will come back anon to gather in the shekels that did not fall into her net last season. She does not pretend to have made more than one hundred thousand dollars by her first campaign on the American stage, and there certainly ought to be more money than that in this country. The way she has of casting her net and throwing out her lines suggests this bit of

PISCATORIAL PHILOSOPHY.

The Jersey Lily has hied her away—
Perhaps for the Prince she's gone to play,
Arrayed in her best bib and tuckers.
We agree with her motto's deep import:
"There are fish in the sea as good as e'er caught;"
But she'll find they are not all "suckers."

We have tears for the chief mourner:

ODE TO THE OWNER OF EOLE.

The Lily has home to her "hubby" gone,
With a "boodle" great in heft;
Freddie's here and looks forlorn,
But won't acknowledge he's left.

.....Mrs. Osmund Tearle triumphed formally and judicially last week in her suit for divorce, and the Judge who promulgated the referee's findings read Osmund a severe lecture. Minnie Conway also succeeded last week in becoming a free woman through establishing that Levy the cornet-player was a married man when he wedded her. Every one of Miss Conway's friends knew that Levy had been married and not widowered before he espoused her, and it was wrong in the cornet-player to have permitted Miss Conway to remain in blissful ignorance, because one effect of the recent legal proceedings is to make the two children resulting from that marriage illegitimate—at least, in the eyes of the law. It is rare that the matrimonial knot is cut for two professionals in the one country in one week, and it would be odder still if this coincidence in the cases of Tearle and Miss Conway should ever bring the two together housekeeping.....The Liars' Club assembled in formidable force at Rockaway last Friday. This was its first clambake since its organization. It had been officially announced that the bake would be enjoyed at Remsen's hostelry. Had it been, the club would have forfeited its charter through being undeserving of its name. The original report was shown to be a lie by the club's attacking the clams at Ruland's instead of at Remsen's.....The truthful Elks have also been clambaking. Between four and five hundred of them sat down on the beach of Narragansett one day last week, and after a discussion of Providence whiskey and Rhode Island corn not more than three hundred of them rose up complaining of sunstroke or cholera-morbus.....The possibilities of electricity are such as to justify the prediction that the day will come when no such thing as a "stick" will be known to the stage. Should a manager find one of his company devoid of animation, he will need only to charge him with electricity to render him as "brilliant" as the brainiest Thespian extant. Already experiments are going on in London with an electric costume designed for the stage. It is a dress embroidered with fine wire thread, so arranged as to form myriads of tiny incandescent lamps and connected with wires terminating in the heels of the shoes worn by the lady. This dress is not especially noticeable until the wearer places her heel upon a small button in the floor, contrived for the purpose and connected below with an electric generator. Then the effect is magical, the whole costume presenting a surface of dazzling brilliancy and remaining so as long as the wires continue in contact with the electric current.....One by one, our minstrel friends who once were "Forty—Count them—Forty!" are falling by the wayside. An exchange tells us: "Parts of the skeleton of another Mastodon have just been dug up near Syracuse, N. Y."..... There is nothing mean about Minnie Hauk as an American. This year she celebrated Independence Day at the great Bohemian watering-place known as Marienbad by inviting all her friends to a big feed at her house. The guests numbered forty. Every lady was required to wear the American colors, sprinkled with silver stars, while every gentleman was expected to wear an American sash on one arm. Foreign princesses and countesses and generals and counts had all to don the patriotic uniform prescribed for them by Minnie. A Russian general ventured to attend without the regulation sash, and the prima-donna snatched a small American flag from behind a mirror and pinned it on an arm. All honor to the girl who was brought up in Rivington street!..... Those who have visited the new Casino have probably not given a thought to the very proper motive animating the projectors of that airy institution. Let us explain:

ART AWAY UP.

"Elevate art?" said the manager. "Why,
I do; and here you have the proof:
My entertainment must be high,
When I give it on the roof!"

.....Every now and then a reminder comes up of poor Adelaide Neilson. Her will, originally admitted to probate in London, Eng., Aug. 30, 1880, was filed for record in Chicago on July 26 last. This was necessary in order to dispose of the property the deceased had owned in that city..... It would seem that it is not alone in this country that actors occasionally apply in vain for relief at the hands of some organization popularly supposed to exist solely for the purpose of pecuniarily relieving the distresses of actors. Albert Robson, an English comedian with a wife and three children dependent upon him, as he avers, for bread, writes to the London newspapers that his appeal to the Actors' Benevolent Fund of that city, the presiding officer of which organization is Henry Irving, has elicited no response.....In the play "Americans" recently produced in Chicago, a number of Sioux Indians were engaged. On Sunday, July 22, Lo and his brethren were taken out to Lincoln Park, where they partook of "fire-water," which is nowhere stronger than in Chicago. When the noble red men got back to the theatre at night, they "just broke things" before they could be captured and locked up in the fly-gallery. It is said that, instead of scalping Lewis Morrison, they sought to initiate him into their brotherhood by covering him from head to foot with red paint. These Indians must have been very drunk indeed not to see that Morrison needed no coloring for the role of a primitive "American."..... Apropos of new plays, elsewhere it has been pointed out how some day there will be an end to dramatic "sticks;" but here is a case in which one is indispensable:

A star vows "The Rocket," his play, he'll make go;
But that star, we opine, will feel sick
When the wits prove no rocket's the slightest show
Till it's fastened itself to a "stick."

.....The London Trocadero has issued successfully from a lawsuit. This music-hall has a license for music only, and yet it has been used for dancing as well. The plaintiff urged that in bringing the suit he was acting in the interest of the occupants of houses in the neighborhood of the Trocadero, "whose peace was disturbed by the noise and the immorality occasioned by the music-hall." The defendant averred that the plaintiff was influenced by malicious motives in an attempt to ruin the defendant, against whom he had previously brought an action for trespass and failed. Without leaving their seats the jury brought in a verdict for the defendant, whence it is to be inferred that a license for music will cover dancing in the British metropolis.....Later advices by cable represent that Lillian Russell has failed to deeply impress Londoners with her talent, and that as a beauty she has been voted "no great shakes." All this might have been different but for that brooch containing the letters "Ned" or "Den," whichever they were. The male habitues of the Gayety Theatre thought that the letters meant that Solomon had taken a lien upon Miss Russell, and they have probably reasoned that it would be a waste of time to attempt to cope with the wisdom of Solomon. So they have resolved to vote Miss Russell as of no account. The moral of this is that brooches having a history should not be worn in public.

CITY SUMMARY.

"THE TWO ORPHANS," with George J. Maddox as Pierre and J. Winston Murray as Jacques, is the dramatic attraction offered at the National Theatre this week, and the way in which it was presented evidently pleased the large audience present on Monday night. In the variety olio are seen Dick Hume and Jennie Lindsay, who yet find "Clipper Ads." a good vehicle for their specialties; Paul Stanley, German character-artist; Harry M. Parker with his clever and amusing dog-circus; James F. Hoey, comedian, whose feature of funny parodies on popular songs answered the purpose intended by eliciting audible smiles; and Sheehan and Coyne, of whose "Ashbox Inspector" the public do not seem to tire. Next Sunday afternoon and evening Prof. Kennedy is to appear at this theatre.

BUSINESS is good at Harry Miner's Bowery Theatre, where Eastside amusement-seekers can enjoy a lengthy programme this week, as presented by the following artists: Prof. Chas. White, whose trained goat does some very clever tricks; the Bell Sisters—Minnie and Maggie—(who, says the bill, now make their first appearance at this theatre) in a taking sketch, introducing songs and duets; Keating and Flynn, breakneck song-and-dance performers; the Eight Mastodons, including the three Gormans, Bob Hooley, Dan Thompson, Thos. Sadler, Eddie Manning and John Williams, who appear in tableau clog-dancing, drilling, etc.; Belle Cushing, a favorite vocalist; Thomas and Clara Maxwell in their flirtation sketch of "Recreation," with a new song; Flora Moore in her vocal and Pat Rooney imitation business; the Cawthorns, who continue to deserve their prefix of "comical;" Frank Lewis, whose topical songs continue to please; the Mastodons again in a Southern plantation sketch; and A. H. Sheldon, assisted by the company, in the burlesque of "The Actors' Boarding-house."

AT THE LONDON THEATRE Ida Siddons' Female Mastodons are still drawing full houses, and, although the company remains the same as last week, there are several changes in the programme which give a taking freshness to the performances. On account of the favor with which they are received, the swinging first-part and "Odds and Ends," with the Three Solitaires—Billy Arnold, Ida Siddons and Burt Queen—as the funmakers, are retained on the bill; but for "The Naiad Queen" "Cinderella" is substituted, and in it an Amazon march is also introduced. The sketch of "The Roasted Lovers," an added feature preceding "Cinderella," evokes screams of laughter. Next week is announced as the last of the season at this house.

ACCOMMODATION FOR PROFESSIONALS.—The Actors' Order of Friendship of Philadelphia have fitted up a room at No. 7 West Fourteenth street for the headquarters of its New York committee. The Order extends a cordial invitation to all professionals, whether members of the Order or not, who may at any time be in the city, to make free use of this room for the purpose of writing their letters, reading, conversation or the transaction of business, for all of which ample accommodations have been provided. THE CLIPPER, other amusement journals and daily newspapers will be found on file, and the room will be kept open the year round. This is a step in the right direction, and the Order is deserving of praise for this movement; and if professionals will give it their encouragement by using it for the purposes so generously offered, we do not see why a permanent actors' club should not become the outgrowth of this modest beginning. At all events, it will obviate the future necessity of professionals congregating in Union square. Attention is directed to a card in our business department.

This garden and theatre will then cover 150 by 400 feet of space on the highest ground in St. Louis. Rumor says the syndicate paid $50,000 for the property. There is a cave underneath the garden 300 feet long, 100 feet wide and 30 feet deep, which gives the name to the place. The investment is a good one, for the ground is in the heart of the resident portion of St. Louis, and fronts on Washington and Jefferson avenues and Locust street. A NEW PLAY.—Lizzie Evans commenced a week's engagement at Comstock's Opera-house, Columbus, O., July 23, in "Fogg's Ferry," which was repeated 24, 25 and matinee 28. "Dewdrop" was given the rest of the week. It is the joint work of Con T. Murphy and Charles E. Callahan, and received its first production on any stage 26, and is said to have been successful. It is a picturesque comedy of the same family as "Fanchon," the scene being located on the coast of Wales. The cast was: Dewdrop, Miss Lizzie Evans; Sylvia Yelverton, Miss Ida Burrows; Grandma Yelverton, Miss Marie Le Gros; Aunt Betty Bright, Miss Ida Tracy; Jessie Browning, Miss Hattie Herman; Jack Bright, Henry Scharf; Tom Bayless, L. D. Blondell; Roy, Edwin Clifford; Egbert Yelverton, disguised as Basil Fielding, C. T. Hynson; St. John Yelverton, D. W. Ingram; Dennis Staley, W. T. Sheehan; Stephens, B. D. Lawrence. The plot may be briefly given as follows: The first act is located on the seacoast, at the cottage of Jack Bright, keeper of Point-of-air lighthouse. Egbert Yelverton, a neighboring young gentleman, being attracted by the beauty of Dewdrop, the supposed daughter of Bright, disguises himself as a fisher-lad (Basil Fielding), the better to seek her as an equal. He succeeds in winning her heart, and learns from Bright that when a babe she was cast ashore from a wreck lashed to the body of a sailor (Roy), whose injuries upon the head made him half-witted. Roy was so christened by the fishermen from the initials R. O. Y. found in India ink upon his arm. He is represented all through the play as the constant companion of Dewdrop. The first act closes with a pretty picture of the saving of a ship by Dewdrop by means of the lighthouse. The second act is laid in the parlor of Sea View Hall, the seat of the Yelvertons. Dewdrop has been sent for by Grandma Yelverton, who has taken a strong fancy to her, and desires her as a companion, which arrangement is consummated. The two brothers, Egbert and St. John Yelverton, figure as lovers of Dewdrop. During the act Roy appears and leaves a locket, which Sylvia Yelverton finds and opens, and reads a paper which proves that Dewdrop is Violet Harrold, the heiress of Sea View Hall. St. John Yelverton also learns this and endeavors to secure her hand. The brothers are forced by jealousy into a bitter quarrel, which causes Dewdrop to return to the beach. Roy, the idiot, is struck down with a riding-whip by St. John Yelverton. The effect of the blow is to restore his reason, and at the close of some very strong dramatic scenes in the fourth and last act, which is located on a cliff overlooking the sea, he reveals the identity of Dewdrop, turning out himself to be Robert O. Yelverton, an elder brother. The scenery was very handsome and varied. The character of Dewdrop, while of the childish comedy order, is full of lights and shades, and well suited to Miss Evans. The performance was smooth, and all that the comedy will need now will be a judicious pruning of redundant dialogue. Miss Evans was the recipient of a complimentary benefit at her old home, Mt. Vernon, 30, the entire house having been sold in advance. A telegram says: "Miss Evans was most enthusiastically received, and was presented with a gold watch and chain by a number of citizens. Hundreds of people were turned away." The company then returned to Cincinnati, where their regular season commences Aug. 25.

MUSICAL.

FORD'S COMIC-OPERA CO. has made a big hit in St. Louis with "Bluebeard," and Uhrig's Cave Garden was filled every evening last week. The costumes are elegant and the music is pleasing. Alice May, the Bluebeard, is not much of a vocalist, but carried her role very well. Miss Louise Eissing took the part of Lili, as Marie Bockel was too ill to appear. Her singing drew forth more applause than Miss May's. W. H. Seymour made up and acted the part of Petipois capitally. His original verses (local) brought him half-a-dozen encores. Philip Branson as Joliquet did not have much to do, but did that well. Miss Geneva Reynolds as Annie came in for her share of applause. "Bluebeard" will be kept on this week.

DISBANDED.—The Norcross Opera Company closed their engagement at Pickwick Garden, St. Louis, Tuesday, July 24. "Le Tyrolean" proved a farce in their hands, and the public couldn't be induced to support them. Miss St. Quinten really carried the opera for eight nights, and then gave up in disgust. Several attachments were sued out against Manager Norcross, but he said that he was going to take the company to New Orleans, claiming that a gentleman there offered him a guaranty of $650 a week for six weeks and the expenses of his company going there.

THE SUMMER SEASON of comic opera of the Boston (Mass.) Museum continues in its successful career, last week's business with "Olivette" being particularly good. This week "Billee Taylor" is the attraction, with this cast: Ben Barnacle, John Howson; Sir Mincing Lane, George W. Wilson; Christopher Crab, George R. Parks; Billee Taylor, Walt Hampshire; Captain, Ed. Marble; Phœbe, Marie Jansen; Eliza, Elma Delaro; Arabella, Anna Gunther; Susan, Helen Dayne. Next week, "Chimes of Normandy," when W. T. Carleton will reappear. This will end the comic-opera season at the Museum, and Haverly's Minstrels are to follow Aug. 12, being the first minstrel troupe to perform on the Museum stage. Business-agent Page of the Museum is enjoying a well-earned vacation in Saratoga.

MISSTATED.—With regard to the suit brought some time ago in St. Louis, Mo., by John C. Duff, manager and proprietor of the Standard Opera Company, against the manager of Pope's Theatre, it has been stated that the action was against Manager Charles Pope. Such is not the case. He has nothing whatever to do with the suit, his season having closed with the first week of Duff's engagement. Mr. Dickson engaged the Duff company to remain a second week upon a certainty, but Duff changed the opera from "Heart and Hand," in which the baritone George Sweet had made a decided hit, to "Patience." Mr. Sweet did not strike or refuse to sing; he simply announced himself unable to study and play the part of Grosvenor at so short a notice. The change of bill and absence of Sweet caused bad business, and Mr. Dickson claims that Mr. Duff did not fulfill his contract when he left his principal attraction out of the cast.

P. T. BARNUM requests us to give publicity to the appended communication, which explains itself:

BRIDGEPORT, Ct., July 30, 1883.

P. T. BARNUM TO THE PUBLIC.—I hereby contradict and denounce the stupid falsehood which is going the round of the papers, that my partners and myself have "pooled our business" with a certain showman. There is not a shadow of truth in that report, and never will be. Showmen who by false reports undertake to couple their names with the combined Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth and Bailey & Hutchinson's Great London Circus, Menagerie and Hippodrome are simply trying to enact Æsop's fable of the frog and the ox, which the public will readily understand. P. T. BARNUM.

JOHN B. DORIS has purchased of G. H. Jones of Oxford, Me., two fine Knox colts that can trot down among the thirties, and during the coming Winter Mr. Doris expects to "take the slack" out of some of his professional friends who make a point of handling the lines over fast horseflesh.

CHARLES MCCARTY, clown, who broke his collar-bone June 18, returned to the Forepaugh Show at Saratoga, N. Y., July 23. Miss Lottie Aymar also returned at White-river Junction, Vt., 28.

DEATH OF AN ELEPHANT.—Prince, one of the largest elephants with the Barnum-London Show, died in Hamilton, Ont., July 23. He was taken ill in Brockville with a disorder of the stomach, which seemed to yield to medicinal treatment—huge draughts of rum and molasses and copious doses of landanum. When Prince reached Hamilton the disease again manifested itself, but in more virulent form. His keeper, George Arlingstall, convinced that Prince was about to die, had him hobbled with heavy chains, and ordered Gipsy, another elephant, to push him outside of the canvas. When he was partly out he fell backward, his limbs convulsively trembled, his trunk turned itself in the air, and with a mighty groan he died. The body was given to a local veterinary surgeon for dissection. Prince had been a great traveler. In 1876, when Mr. Bailey was one of the proprietors of Cooper & Bailey's Circus, he sailed from San Francisco with Prince for Australia. Thence they went to Java and Japan, then through China and India to New Zealand. Thence they traveled to Peru, being fifty-two days at sea in a sailing-vessel. From Peru they went to Chili, and thence around the Horn, through the Straits of Magellen to Montevideo. Thence they went to Buenos Ayres and along the coast of Brazil to Bahia and Para. This tour lasted till 1879, three years, during which Prince traveled 76,000 miles. "He was the best traveler by water I ever saw," says Mr. Bailey. "When we were at sea and a storm came on he would seize a stanchion and roll with a ship with all the grace of an old sailor. He was a highly intelligent animal. If he hadn't a kind word for everyone, he had a kind caress. Why, I do not know what I would have done without him when I was traveling. He did the work of twenty men, loading, unloading, pushing and pulling."

A CIRCUS ON FIRE.—Nathans & Co.'s Show exhibited in Portsmouth, Va., July 24, and at the night exhibition between four and five thousand men, women and children were present. Shortly after the commencement of the performance the wind began to blow strongly, and a rent was made in the canvas, which swayed heavily. A horse was brought in for the use of one of the bareback performers, and his rider mounted and attempted to go on with the performance; but the horse seemed to be aware of the impending danger, and refused to stay in the ring. Then the wind struck the tent with great violence, tearing the canvas from the centre-pole to the side, and causing some of the poles to fall. The crowd became panic-stricken and began to rush for the entrance in a wild endeavor to escape. Then the cry of "Fire!" was heard, and the panic-stricken crowd became almost delirous with terror. The lamps over the ring had set the canvas on fire, and it was burning furiously; but a deluge of rain commenced falling, and it extinguished the flames after the tent was about half destroyed. A few men proved equal to the occasion, and stood bravely fighting the flames and assisting the women and children out from among the debris by tearing or cutting the canvas. All who emerged on one side of the tent were suddenly precipitated into a ditch about five feet deep, fully grown up with briars. Here ladies, children and men were piled in inextricable confusion. To add to the confusion, the fire-bells commenced to ring and the steam-whistles to signal alarms, throwing the city into great excitement and turning out great numbers of citizens. A great many people were badly hurt and had limbs broken, but no one was killed outright.

TO ALWARD & CO.'S CONSOLIDATED SHOWS two new hot-air balloons have been added. Lew Nichols and Alex. Mervine are making ascensions. The Knowltons and C. C. Leon, acrobats, joined recently. The show exhibited in Coon Rapids July 23, Hillsdale 24, Carrol City 25.

Johnson, principal equestrienne; John J. Sheridan, clown and scenic equestrian; the four Johnson Sisters, parlor gymnasts; and the D'Arzine Brothers, acrobats. JOHN B. DORIS' INTEROCEAN SHOW is creating a boom in New England, as will be seen by the appended laudatory press-notices:

THE PERFORMANCE.—The John B. Doris Great Interocean Circus pleased some 3,500 people yesterday afternoon, and 7,500 last evening, for more than two hours, and there were few, if any, who left the tent unsatisfied. Seventeen numbers made up the programme, and not one of them was of an inferior order. The Japanese Prince Satsuma gave some fine balancing, introducing feats never seen in Providence before, and was warmly applauded. The La Martine Brothers did an unusually good posturing act, and four gymnasts on double horizontal bars showed all that could be done in their line. The appearance of Millie Christine, the two-headed woman, in the ring, aroused much interest. Miss Sallie Marks, a little lady of sixteen years, surprised the audience with her wonderful riding. Prof. Wingfield exhibited his troupe of trained dogs, who gave the best proof of their master's skill as a trainer. Millie Tournour, a very winning lady, gave one of the most daring exhibitions on the trapeze ever seen. The Royal Russian Athletes were very good in a novel ladder-act, while the Seigrist Brothers fully sustained their well known reputation. Miss Ella Stokes in her bareback act was graceful and easy, and pleased all; but it remained for Willie Showles to take the house by storm, his act being encored—a thing quite novel for the circus-ring. The closing act was by Zazel, and the audience were pleasingly disappointed in her, for she not only did all that she advertised, but much more. In her leap for life, diving from a beam 70ft. above the ground into a net, the people fairly held their breath, while the cannon act was as successful as ever. During Mr. Showles' act his horse fell, but the rider luckily escaped injury. The three clowns, French, Jewish and Irish, are all good, but Johnny Patterson leads them all. To sum up all in a few words, Mr. Doris has a show that is difficult to surpass, and Providence will be glad to see it again.—Providence (R. I.) Telegram, July 12.

DORIS' GREAT INTEROCEAN CIRCUS arrived in town at an early hour this morning, and commenced at once the work of pitching their canvas on Pope's Island. The later hours until after nine were devoted to preparations, and then the street-parade commenced. The show made was fully as good as had been expected from the very favorable notices by which the press had heralded its approach. A large and gorgeous chariot, containing a brass band and drawn by eight handsome silver-gray horses, headed the column, and then followed a long array of gilded wagons, some covered with mirrors and others having their sides down, showing lions, hyenas and birds to the gaze of the people. Prominent among these attractions was a lion-tamer sitting coolly among his pets, consisting of two old and one young lion; a lady in a car open on the sides, fondling a snake; and on the tops of the wagons were jubilee-singers warbling sweet plantation songs, grotesque figures full of funny actions, the Goddess of Liberty and attendants, and other attractions too numerous to mention. The gun from which Zazel is fired appeared, drawn by four stout horses, and there were ladies and attendant cavaliers handsomely mounted, clowns on mules, camels, elephants, and all the other parts which go to complete a great show. The streets were crowded with people, and the windows, piazzas and balconies of houses and other buildings on the route all had their full quota of interested spectators. The street-show for number of vehicles and the general features has not been surpassed in this city for years, although in the past two we have seen both Barnum and Forepaugh. Of the circus itself we cannot speak too highly, as every act was a feature. There were more than 4,500 people under the canvas this afternoon, and to-night they will doubtless turn thousands away. At this city the services of the Russian Athletes were dispensed with by the management.—Evening Sentinel, New Bedford, Mass., July 14.

Miss Ella Stokes, the daring and graceful bareback rider of the circus, was presented by her many warm friends connected with the J. B. Doris Circus company with a large number of rich and costly presents yesterday, on the occasion of her birthday. Miss Stokes has been engaged with Mr. Doris the past two seasons and has made many friends, becoming the favorite of the company. She is a very bright and intelligent lady and highly educated.—Augusta Morning Journal, Augusta, Me., July 26.

Truly, this was a gala day in our city, for not since the appearance of the Great Barnum have we witnessed such a mass of human beings as was in our city to-day to attend the Great Interocean Show. At an early hour the streets presented a lively appearance, farmers, their wives and their children pouring in from the rural districts, coming for miles and in every conceivable style of vehicles, some of which were somewhat antediluvian, and reminded us of our grandfather's days. In addition, the Maine Central R. R. contributed from the north and south of Augusta. So by the hour of ten, when the parade left the grounds, our city was thronged, and still the people were pouring in. It required all the efforts of our City Marshal and his aids and of the extra police to keep open a passage-way through our principal streets for the parade to pass in. The parade was in every way satisfactory, and equally as fine as any that has visited our city. The management is to be credited for the many open dens of animals exposed to the public view. At the afternoon performance there were fully 4,500 people in attendance, and, judging from the opinion expressed by our citizens in general, it is the best performance ever given in Augusta, and we can safely say that the pavilion will be tested to its fullest capacity this evening, and we can further vouch for Mr. Doris a repetition of overflowing houses when he next visits Augusta.—Augusta Journal, July 26.

THE DORIS CIRCUS—AN EXCELLENT STREET PARADE AND FINE RING-PERFORMANCE.—The Doris Circus attracted a much larger crowd than was anticipated, considering that there has already been one circus here this season, and that the country people are busy haying. When the parade started, at 10.15, the streets were densely crowded. It was very noticeable that the bucolic element largely predominated. The parade was very satisfactory, and in every respect was the equal of any ever in Bangor. The performance this afternoon was witnessed by a very large and delighted audience. It is much more satisfactory to witness a one-ring programme than to strain the eyes to observe what is taking place in three rings at the same time. The bareback-riding of Willie Showles aroused much enthusiasm. One of his most wonderful feats was jumping on his horse, going at full speed, without touching the animal with his hands. The acrobatic features were of a high order of excellence, the Seigrist Brothers in particular giving a superb performance. Millie Tournour gave a very daring and graceful balancing-trapeze. Prof. Wingfield exhibited his finely-trained dogs to the delight of the audience, and Johnny Patterson and Francis Kennbel, Irish and French clowns, added their quota of fun. The programme closed with the specialties of Zazel, who walked a wire with her feet in a basket, took a headlong plunge from the top of the tent, and was fired from a cannon. The menagerie contained several features of special interest, including a black camel and a lioness with three cubs. Millie Christine, the two-headed lady, and the leading feature of the circus, is a phenomenon of the Siamese-twin order. There will be another performance this evening, at which there should be a large audience, as the merits of the circus certainly entitle it to a liberal patronage.—Bangor Daily Commercial, July 28.

A MONSTROSITY.—The Recorder of Amsterdam, N. Y., of July 28 says: "The other day a young married woman (colored) living in Chatham gave birth to a baby which was born and lives now with two distinct faces and two partial heads. In short, it has a face before and one behind. In the centre of the head there is a division across and down some distance, but starting from the same neck. Unfortunately for the double chances of getting on which this wonderful baby would have had, though eyes, ears, nose and mouth are all there, or places for them, the organs are wanting, and only one face is furnished with the ordinary faculties."

GEO. H. LENNOX, late general agent with Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels, can be engaged. See card.

FABER HALL, Hazlehurst, Miss., recently completed, is to rent or it can be secured on sharing terms, as advertised by M. Faber & Co.

THE INDIAN VILLAGE terminated a fortnight's season in Troy, N. Y., July 28 to big business. Trouble about license prevented a further stay. The Village opened in Saratoga 30. Company: Parker and Dogs, Florence French, Lexington, Johnson and Levanion, the Brennans and Capt. Laible Karl Bros. and Baldwin, Texas Charlie and ten Indians. Healy & Bigelow, proprietors.

LIVING CURIOSITIES and specialty artists are wanted for the reopening of the New York Museum (about Sept. 15) and subsequent dates, and several of the leading museum attractions whose names are given in the advertisement are requested to communicate with N. Morris, manager. Dr. Arthur Cole has been again engaged as director of amusements.

PROF. F. C. TAYLOR, illusionist, has been entertaining large audiences at Saratoga, N. Y., and that his performances pleased is shown by the appended notice copied from The Daily Journal of July 27. The professor opened in Glens Falls 28, to remain there five nights.

THE ENTERTAINMENT AT PUTNAM HALL.—The entertainment given for the benefit of the Humane Society last evening by Prof. F. C. Taylor was one of the best we have ever seen of the kind. Prof. Taylor is a marvelously dexterous prestidigitator, and some of his acts are astonishingly clever. The growth of flowers was wonderful, and the box-trick was quite as mysterious and inexplicable as anything in the line of mediumistic tricks that is done on the stage. The professor was chained to the stage, handcuffed with a pair of Detective Andrus' best wristlets, and yet he managed to free himself and get into a box that was locked and sealed by a sharp-eyed committee of three gentlemen and enveloped in a perfect network of ropes. A very pretty and remarkable feature of this delightful entertainment was the egg-dance by Mlle. Irena, while the fantastic marionette performance set the juvenile part of the audience in a roar. Altogether, it was a most enjoyable entertainment, and Prof. Taylor and Mlle. Irena may be sure that they will have a big audience if they ever come to Saratoga again.

A ROMANCE OF THE IRISH STAGE.

EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: In the story of "A Woman's Fortune," in a recent issue of your paper, the heroine appears on the stage as a male. Some years ago an agreeable sensation was caused in the provincial towns of Ireland by Master Murray, a youth possessing a wonderful voice and most attractive appearance. After he had sung in the provinces for some months his fame reached Dublin. A very intimate friend of mine was proprietor of a music-hall there, and he engaged Master Murray at what was considered a very liberal salary—£2 per week. A very talented couple, Mr. and Mrs. Randal, were fulfilling an engagement at this hall. By some means Mrs. R. soon discovered that Master Murray was sailing under false colors, viz., that he

SILBONS,

The Greatest Aerial Performers in the World.

SECOND SEASON WITH THE GREAT FOREPAUGH SHOW.

Important Notice to Managers of Combinations, Etc.

The SILBONS, four in number, three males and one female, WILL BE AT LIBERTY ON NOV. 1 for fifteen or sixteen weeks. Their act can be put up in any theatre or hall in a few hours. Have also a new statue acrobatic act, with limelight effects. Have also all dresses, properties, etc., for children's pantomime of "Cinderella" and "The Gathering of the Clans." A good agent with money or a combination-manager who knows his business will find the Silbons one of the greatest cards ever played. Mexican and Californian managers, write. Address Forepaugh' Show, en route, or care of CLIPPER. P. S.—It is useless making any comments in regard to what the Silbons are, as it is acknowledged by all that a finer aerial act never was seen in the United States. "Did you see the trapeze-act by ——, that beats all. I would not have missed it for ten times the entrance-money," is the remark of the vast crowds as they daily leave the canvas. The Silbons have on record the greatest successes ever made by any aerial performers in London, Paris, Berlin, Madrid, Lisbon, Copenhagen, and all the principal cities of Europe. Lithographs, posters, etc. To a manager who understands well outside business, Mr. C. Silbon is prepared to form a company of the best novelties, and take charge of all stage-arrangements. 19-2t*

To the Proprietors and Managers of Theatres and Places of Amusement in the United States:

We beg to notify you that we have purchased from the authors and are the exclusive owners of the play or drama known as "STORM-BEATEN." We are sure that this simple announcement will be sufficient to prevent all respectable managers from producing or permitting the production of any play under that name in any place of amusement under their management without our consent. But as to those who do not respect our rights, we are determined to prosecute them to the full extent of the law. After the production of the play at the Union-square Theatre in the City of New York during the present season, we will be pleased to negotiate for the production of the play throughout the country.

This compound is superior to any preparation hitherto invented, combining in a very highly concentrated state the medical properties of the Cubebs and Copaiba. ELK NOTES.

UNDER THE AUSPICES of Providence Lodge, No. 14, a clambake was highly enjoyed at Oakland Beach, R. I., July 26. The members of the Lodge and invited guests assembled in the lodge-rooms in Providence at 8 A. M., and each person was supplied with a badge and a Japanese umbrella, on which was painted "Elks" in red. An hour later a procession, headed by a band of thirty pieces, was formed on Westminster street, and it moved to the railroad depot, where the guests from the Boston Lodge were received. After escorting them through some of the principal streets a special train conveyed the entire party to Oakland Beach, where a large number of people had preceded them. Bathing, a baseball match, a fat-men's race, music, etc., were enjoyed until noon, when the clambake was served, after which there was dancing until 6 P. M., when the party took the train for Providence. Among the guests were Frank Girard, Arthur Moreland, Alexander Clark, Archie Stalker and others of the New York Lodge and representatives from lodges in Washington, Hartford, Indianapolis, Boston, Philadelphia, etc.

A NEW PLAY.

CHICAGO, July 31.

"A Mountain Pink," a romantic five-act drama, written by Elwyn A. Barron and Morgan Bates for Miss Louise Sylvester, received its first production on any stage at the Grand Opera-house last night, in the presence of a large audience. It was cast thus: Sincerity Weeks, Miss Louise Sylvester; Harold Wilmot, Forest Robinson; Colonel Mark Trafton, Mr. Pierce; Felix Bonnory, John A. Lane; Jerry Richards, George O. Morris; Jack Weeks, Harry Hawk; Scip, Barry Maxwell; Jim Peters, Mr. Stephens; Belle Trafton, Miss Helen Sedgwick; Nondas Bonnory, Miss Lettie Allen; Symantha Weeks, Miss J. Lear. The play takes its title from the sobriquet given to Sincerity Weeks, the heroine, and is located in North Carolina, treating life and character as they are supposed to exist in that locality. Incidental to the story there is presented a phase of the mountain life of the moonshiners, one scene being in the vicinity of the camp of one of these illegal bands. The heroine is a type of Southern girl, something similar to Esmeralda. The piece is cleverly constructed, and it was well mounted, several scenes having been freshly painted for it. It ran smoothly for a first performance. Louise Sylvester in a vivacious role well suited to her abilities worked hard to make the play go. Barry Maxwell made a hit as an old negro. The piece gives fair promise of future success. ....."The World," by the Boston Theatre Company, continues at McVicker's Theatre to fair patronage. "Youth" is to be produced Aug. 7.....The Thomas concerts continue to attract large audiences to the Exposition Building....."The Americans" was withdrawn at Hooley's Theatre 29, and McKee Rankin's season ended. The house is to remain closed for two weeks, reopening Aug. 13.....Haverly's Theatre will inaugurate its new season Aug. 6 with "The Silver King."..... Frank A. Cooper and Georgia Woodthorpe opened at the National Theatre last night in their new play "The Butterfly," and attracted a fair house.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 31.

Fifteen hundred people greeted the opening of Worth's Museum, under the management of W. C. Coup, in Falls Field Park last night, and the show gave entire satisfaction.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 31.

All places of amusement were closed Sunday, except the People's Theatre, where Robert McWade appeared as Rip Van Winkle to a full house.....Ford's Company continue "Bluebeard" this week.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 31.

The Standard English-opera Company opened in the Academy of Music last night to standing-room, notwithstanding other local attractions. "The Bohemian Girl" was produced and well rendered, many numbers being encored.

SUCCESS OF DALY'S COMPANY—"HER SECOND LOVE" A FAILURE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July 31.

At the California Theatre Daly's Company has evidently hit the popular taste. "The Passing Regiment" has been presented with new and beautiful scenery, realistic appointments and appropriate costumes. It has attracted large and enthusiastic audiences, and the prospects are that the engagement will terminate as brilliantly as it opened. Ada Rehan as Etelka has captured young San Francisco. "The Squire" was produced July 30.....Maud Granger, who opened in Baldwin's Theatre 23 in "Her Second Love," has not so far proved a success either artistically or financially. The title is evidently the best part of the play. "Camille" is to be produced Aug. 3 for two nights. Agnes Herndon is to begin 6 in "Led Astray."....Wallack's Co. closed in the Grand Opera-house July 21. Rose Coghlan's benefit 20, when she appeared in "The Lady of Lyons," was a great success, and realized a handsome sum of money. The theatre remained closed until 29, when, for the benefit of the telegraph operators on strike, "The Long Strike" was performed. It was a great success, and realized about $3,000. Fred N. Bert assumed the management 30, when "Youth" was revived.....Sol Smith Russell in "Edgewood Folks" is to be the attraction at the Bush-street Theatre when it shall be reopened, Aug. 4.....Emerson's Minstrels continue to do a large business at the Standard Theatre [A cipher word unintelligible.—ED. CLIPPER.].....The Spanish Students, having made a success, are to continue at the Winter Garden until further notice.....At the Tivoli "Martha" is to be produced when the public tires of the present bill.....There are no new people at the Bella Union this week.....J. G. Reilly made his first appearance 30 at the Adelphi. Business good.....Another new place of amusement is to bid for public patronage—a dime museum under the management of Charles A. King.....Martin Simonsen and daughter have arrived from Australia, and Thomas Maguire has returned from the East.

BOSTON, July 31.

"Billee Taylor" opened the week at the Museum to a good house. John Howson's Barnacle, George Wilson's Sir Mincing Lane and Marie Jansen's Phœbe were the features of the performance. The opera was generally well presented..... The supplemental season at the Bijou, under John Braham's lease, opened with "The Mascot" last night to a very good house. Nat Goodwin's Lorezo and Rose Stella's Bettina were the hits of the piece.....At Oakland Garden C. H. Smith's "Rooms for Rent" Company opened to a large audience. Mollie Fuller made her first appearance in this city as Mrs. Cutler, though she has been seen here before in other attractions. She made a hit.....At the Boylston Museum yesterday business was brisk, the best work being that of Seal, and Fox and Ward.

DEATHS IN THE PROFESSION.

ROSE MASSEY died of consumption July 23 at 108 West Seventeenth street, New York City, in the 32d year of her age. Her funeral took place from there 24, the Rev. Dr. B. F. De Costa of the Church of St. John the Evangelist reading the Episcopal service. The only persons present were her physician, Tony Pastor and wife and two women-friends, who had cared for her during her three years' illness. Deceased began her professional career at the Haymarket Theatre, London, Eng., July 1, 1867, playing Mary Meredith in "Our American Cousin." She attracted little notice as an actress until she appeared in the pantomime of "Bluebeard," playing Fatima, in 1871, at Covent-garden Theatre, then under the management of Augustus Harris. Later she played leading business at the Globe Theatre with the late Henry J. Montague, and during her career had acted in all of the principal London theatres. She arrived in this city during the week ending Jan. 23, 1869. The Lydia Thompson Burlesque Troupe closed an engagement at Wood's Museum 30 and moved to Niblo's Garden. Manager Wood organized another burlesque company, headed by Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence, and presented it to the public Feb. 1 in "The Field of the Cloth of Gold," in which Rose Massey made her American debut as Earl Darnley. She did not make much of a success, as she was excessively nervous, her voice was weak and her singing unsatisfactory. The burlesque was withdrawn Feb. 27, and Miss Massey went to Canada, returning to this city to play Boy Blue in the pantomime of "Mother Hubbard" at Wallack's Theatre June 7, when the Lauri Family made their American debut. She subsequently played engagements in other theatres, seldom remaining long in any of them, and was frequently in retirement for months at a time. She returned to England and played there for a time. When the late H. J. Montague was first engaged at Wallack's she came back here and claimed to be his wife, and threatened, if she did not commence, legal proceedings which caused a journalistic sensation for a time; but a compromise was effected, and she went back to England. About four years ago she again arrived here. She had since lived in seclusion, few of her former friends being aware that she was in the city when she died.

CHAS. H. DEARBORN, a veteran showman and business-manager, well known on the New England circuit for the past twenty years, died of bronchial consumption at his home in Chelsea, Mass., July 24. The past seven years he had been connected with Prof. Queen, magician, and managed his various exhibitions.

JENNIE GRACE, a midget on exhibition at the Westside Museum, Coney Island, died July 28. She is said to have been 16 months old, 21 inches high and to have weighed only two pounds.

ACCIDENTALLY KILLED.—On Sunday night, July 22, about 6 o'clock, Thomas Custy, a brakesman on the N. Y., P. & O. R. R., accidentally fell between two cars near Freedom, O., and thirteen cars passed over his body, mangling it in a terrible manner. His remains were taken to Meadville, Pa. He had been in the employ of the railroad company only a short time, and at the time of his demise was completing his third trip. His brother-in-law A. W. Lytle, was the conductor of the train. Mr. Custy had previously been an acrobat and a trapeze-performer with circuses, but had retired from the profession on account of disability, having made his last appearance July 13, 1882, with the United States Circus. For some time he was one of the three "Milton Jaspers," who traveled with W. W. Cole's Show in 1875. In the Winter of 1875-6 Mr. Custy and his two associates went to Meadville, and one of them, Joseph Varilla, while practicing an extra hazardous feat, met with injuries which caused his death Feb. 19, 1876. Mr. Custy had traveled with the Sells Bros.' Circus some five or six years. He was 29 years of age, unmarried, and left an aged father and several brothers and sisters. His funeral took place 23 from his brother-in-law's residence, the interment being in the Catholic Cemetery.

RICHARD AUSTIN LEE died in London, Eng., June 30, in his sixty-fourth year. He was for many years treasurer of the City of London Theatre, while his brother Nelson was the lessee and manager.

FRED MUELLER died in Covington, Ky., April 4 last, information of which has just been sent us. He was an orchestral leader and violinist somewhat celebrated for his "Barnyard" solo. While traveling the past season with Carrie Swain's Co. he was taken ill with pneumonia in Chillicothe, O., March 29, and was left behind. Subsequently he was removed to his brother's home in Covington, where he died.

THE BOSS GOURMAND.

We take the following from an English exchange: "Alfred Mouchet, who for many years was well known as l'homme au seau, or the bucket-man, is dead. By trade he was a horse-dealer's assistant; but it was as the champion eater of the French capital that he became famous. Upon one occasion he consumed at a single sitting a turkey, a leg of mutton, a pound of cheese, several pounds of bread, and a bucketful of wine, and in 1876, after a contest of two hours, he defeated a man named Dietrich, who had been pitted against him by an Englishman, the beaten competitor only succumbing after having eaten 8lb of mutton, 8lb of chicken, and a proportionate quantity of bread. The victory cost the champion a serious illness, and in the following year Dr. Lachat, who had attended him, read before the Academy of Medicine a curious paper, in which he declared his conviction that, with the exception of a Basque named Lorion, who had been accustomed to consume 15lb of bread a day, Mouchet was the greatest eater that ever lived."

BILLIARDS.

"JOHN CREAHAN of the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, has devised a much-needed appliance for reducing the noise in rooms, and a patent has been granted him for it. Almost every player who has consideration for others will recall how much he has been made to suffer in consequence of the mania his neighboring players have had for hammering their cues upon the floor, as if to beat time when they had failed to beat their antagonist. Creahan stops this racket by a simple device that he attaches to the butt of the cue. As he describes it in his letter, his invention, despite its amusing simplicity, is something we never before heard of or saw. Creahan conceived the idea because he had failed to get the thing itself, or substitute for it, from the billiard manufacturers. He has decided to fix the price at one dollar a dozen."—NEW YORK CLIPPER. 13-6t*eow
